MATTERN ON LONE FLIGHT ROUND GLOBE

Heads Out Over Atlantic After Fast Trip From New York

PLANS STOP AT PARIS IN SEEKING RECORD

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP).—Bound around the world alone, Jimmie Mattern soared over Newfoundland and headed out over the open sea tonight.

With the wind behind him and fair weather all about, the twenty-eight-year-old Texas aviator was reported late today to have been sighted over the Wadham Islands off the extreme northeastern coast of Newfoundland.

Earlier—slightly more than seven hours after he left New York—Mattern was seen over Lewisporte, Newfoundland, some 1,200 miles from the start. He had left Floyd Bennett Field, Brooklyn, at 4:20 a.m., Eastern standard time.

GAINS FOUR HOURS

By not landing at Harbor Grace—the customary stopping point for flyers before they attempt the Atlantic—Mattern gained almost four hours advantage on the round-the-world record of eight days, fifteen hours and fifty-one minutes, set by Wiley Post and Harold Gatty in 1931.

Following the Lindbergh route, Mattern's first scheduled stop was Paris, which he expected to reach within twenty-seven hours. Then, after six hours' sleep, straight on to Moscow, dipping over the Templehof Airdrome in Berlin en route.

BAD WEATHER REPORTED

But first, there was fog and rain along the Irish Coast to battle.

KIDNAPPERS OF GIRL CONFESS

Police Say Two Admit Their Guilt—Jury Indicts Six Others

KANSAS CITY, June 3 (AP).—Facing possible death on the gallows under the Missouri law, Walter McGee, twenty-eight, former Oregon convict, and Clarence Click, twenty-seven, of Kansas City, confessed the kidnapping of Miss Mary McElroy today, police said. The developments came as a Federal grand jury indicted them and six others in the plot.

The abduction of the twenty-five-year-old daughter of City Manager H. F. McElroy, her safe release on $30,000 ransom, the arrest of eight suspects, the return of five from Amarillo, Texas, and the indictments and confession were the events of a single week to the hour.

WANTED A "PAY-OFF"

As Thomas J. Higgins, chief of detectives, started to question McGee upon his return from Amarillo, the former convict replied, "I want to tell everything and get it over with."

Admitting he and Clarence Stevens boldly entered the city manager's home a week ago and forced Miss McElroy to accompany them, McGee said, "We did not intend to harm the young woman. We didn't even give the consequences a thought. We just wanted an easy pay-off."

In his long, rambling confession, McGee said he and Stevens first intended to kidnap Henry F. McElroy, Jr., the city manager's son.

RETURN INDICTMENTS

As the story of the kidnap plot was being related, the Federal grand jury returned indictments against McGee Clarence Click, held at police headquarters; Clarence Stevens and George McGee, fugitives; Windell Johnson, Hazel Johnson, L. R. Gilbert and Lenora Gilbert—the last four arrested yesterday with McGee at Amarillo.

PLANETS TO BE IN CONJUNCTION

Jupiter and Mars Will Appear in Same Line of Vision From Earth

PASADENA, Cal., June 3 (AP).—Jupiter and Mars will appear tomorrow night in what astronomers call "conjunction," or on the same line of vision from the earth.

Such conjunctions, says Dr. C. C. Conroy, a fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, have no astronomical significance, and are noted particularly for their picturesqueness. They occur once in every 720 days, and tomorrow night they will be closer than usual.

To witness the conjunction, Dr. Conroy said, one should look slightly west and south of a point directly overhead to see Mars, red, the smaller of the two, and Jupiter, giant of the planets, which is a dull yellow, and brighter.

Scouts "Marching Past" In Review

THE above picture shows the colors of the combined Victoria and district Boy Scout troops being dipped to Hon. Joshua Hinchliffe as he took the salute at the annual Scout rally held yesterday afternoon in Beacon Hill Park. The weather was ideal and some fine competitions were held by the troops. The Hardinge Cup, for general efficiency, was given to St. Mary's Troop.

Direction of Economic Policy for Generations May Be Fixed at London

Stream of Lava Flowing Fast to Rim of Vesuvius' Crater

NAPLES, June 3 (AP).—A new hole was punched through the crust of Mount Vesuvius, today, and from it flowed a stream of lava which, tonight, threatened to pour down the side of the volcano. The break, appearing in the southern part of the large shallow crater, came after several days of continuous internal explosions.

Lava, flowing at the rate of ten yards a minute, was advancing toward the rim and was expected to overpour during the night. The flow is toward the "Valley of Inferno," an uninhabited region on the side of the volcano which faces Pompeii.

Inhabitants of villages at the base of the mountain were spending a sleepless night, terrorized by the continuous rumbling and pyrotechnical display.

British Authority Gives Views on Possible Outcome of World Conference

MONETARY PROBLEMS ARE MAJOR CONCERN

By SIR ARTHUR SALTER

(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

LONDON, June 3 (By wireless).—The World Economic Conference which opens here Monday, June 12, may decide an issue even more important than the time and method of recovery from the present depression. It may determine the main direction of economic policy for some generations to come.

The world now stands hesitant between alternative systems, one designed to develop world trade, the other to develop national or regional self-sufficiency. Hitherto the economic nationalism which has been sapping the foundations of world trade has for the most part been accidental rather than intentional. It has represented concessions to demands for assistance, or opportunist devices to meet emergencies, rather than deliberate and consistent policy.

VALUE OF TRADE

In the last four years each country has learned, by its loss, the value of its external trade, and it has learned the difficult conditions upon which the development of that trade depends.

The coming conference represents unprecedented concentration and effort to repair the temporarily

Hundreds Searching Ruins at Signal Hill For Possible Victims

Number of Known Dead From Explosion Stands at Ten—Not Yet Able to Make Definite Estimate of Damage

SIGNAL HILL, Calif., June 3 (AP).—With 400 workmen pressing the search for possible additional victims in the explosion and fire that left desolate a ten-block area in the Signal Hill oil field, yesterday, the number of known dead stood at ten tonight. Seven of the two score persons injured were reported in serious condition, and property damage was estimated at approximately $750,000.

The Richfield plant, where the explosion occurred, was wiped out as were ten blocks of oil derricks, tanks and other apparatus. A survey by oil company and insurance investigators indicated ten private homes were demolished, from sixty to eighty damaged, and hundreds of windows shattered over a wide area in adjacent Long Beach.

Besides the Richfield Company, several other oil companies lost derricks. The Richfield absorption plant, scene of the detonation, was valued at a half million dollars. Other damage was to derricks, tanks and machinery, and firemen said the estimate would be swelled considerably if it becomes necessary to redrill any of the wells.

SHOCK FELT AT SAN FRANCISCO

Earthquake of Some Intensity Shakes Outlying Sections Without Damage

SAN FRANCISCO, June 3 (AP).—An earthquake of considerable intensity was felt by residents in the outlying sections of San Francisco at about 6:45 o'clock tonight, while persons in the downtown section observed a slight shock. There were no reports of damage.

Residents in the districts bordering the ocean, said there were two distinct shocks, one of slight motion and the second of severe intensity.

The shocks, apparently, were of local character, as nearby cities did not feel the disturbances.

Perry Byerly, associate professor of seismology at the University of California, said instruments at the university recorded the quake at 6:44 p.m. He said it was of slight intensity, and that he was unable to estimate its distance or direction from the record.

Killed by a Cow Falling From Air

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., June 3 (AP).—A cow hurled high in the air by a passing train, today, fell on two negro children, killing one and causing serious injury to the other.

DEATH FOLLOWS BLOWOUT OF TIRE

Woman Killed and Three Injured When Car Crashes Into Telephone Pole

SEATTLE, June 3 (AP).—Mrs. A. P. Lundahl, Auburn, was fatally injured in an automobile accident north of Kent today, and three others were seriously hurt.

Mrs. Lundahl's husband was driving their car when a blow-out of a tire veered it into a ditch, and then it crashed into a telephone pole.

Bernice Biggess, eighteen, and Elsie Linnigar, nineteen, of Yakima, who had been visiting with the Lundahls, were cut and bruised, and Lundahl was treated for contusions, shock and possibly more severe injuries.

POPE INDICTS MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT

CONSIDERED GRAVE CRIME AT VATICAN

VATICAN CITY, June 3 (AP).—President Niceto Alcala Zamora of Spain and other members of the Spanish Government were automatically ex-communicated from the Roman Catholic Church today, as the result of new Spanish religious laws described by Pope Pius as "a serious attack on religion and the church."

The ex-communication was announced by the Papal Secretary of State after the Pope dramatically issued a scorching encyclical, indicting the heads of the Republican regime at Madrid for grave spiritual crimes.

DECLARATION OF "WAR"

Diplomatic circles here interpreted the strongly-worded encyclical as a "declaration of spiritual war," and predicted the breaking off of diplomatic relations between Spain and the Holy See.

The Pontiff addressed his manifesto to all bishops in the world. He asserted he was making no attempt to thwart political reforms, "because the church accommodates herself to all forms of government and civil institutions, provided the rights of God and the Christian conscience are left intact."

Eight separate charges were made against the Spanish Republic.

In his general encyclical declaration the Pontiff exhorted the "dearly loved" Spanish people to use "all legitimate means to nullify the hateful legislation."

(The Spanish congregations law, containing many of the provisions against which the Pope complained, was signed Friday in Madrid by President Alrala Zamora.)

No decree of ex-communication will be proclaimed because the acts committed by the Spanish Government, it was explained at the Papal State Department, come automatically under the provisions of canon law. Ex-communication was not mentioned in the encyclical.

The Pontiff said the law against the church resulted from "a hatred which secret organizations that seek the destruction of all religious and social order entertained against the Lord."

FORMER REEVE PASSES AWAY

Saanich Loses Public-Spirited Resident in Death of Frank Noble Borden

Funeral services for Frank Noble Borden, ex-Reeve of Saanich, who passed away at his home on Friday evening, will be held in Hayword's B.C. Funeral Chapel at 2:15 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. Interment will be made in Royal Oak Burial Park.

In the passing of Mr. Borden, Saanich has lost one of its outstanding public men. From 1910 to 1915 he was a member of the municipal council, and during the years of 1916 and 1917 was reeve. He was intimately acquainted with the many problems of Saanich, and even during his latter years took a keen interest in municipal affairs, his son, Fred, being a member of the Saanich Council.

Mr. Borden was born in Canard, Kings County, Nova Scotia, seventy-four years ago. He had been a resident of Saanich for forty years.

Surviving him are his widow, one daughter, two sons and a granddaughter residing at Lake Hill; also six sisters and four brothers.

MANY KILLED IN BLAST

SASEBO, Japan, June 3 (AP).—Forty-six persons were killed and thirty seriously injured in a coal mine explosion at Sakito, near Sasebo, this morning, according to an official report.

Two Boys Lose Lives In Niagara

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., June 3 (AP).—Two seventeen-year-old boys were believed to have been swept to death in the rapids of the Lower Niagara River this afternoon. The youths, Lamonte Wigle and Raymond Thweat, both of this city, had gone swimming with two other boys near the whirlpool and ventured out into the swifter current. Suddenly both Wigle and Thweat were swept down stream and disappeared in the rapids.

Neither boy had returned home tonight, nor had the searchers found trace of their bodies.

Capt. Danes Catches Half Of Salmon—Loses Prize

Here is a hard luck story, and incidentally a problem in the piscatorial art that confronted the officials of the Victoria and Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association.

"Captain" John Danes, of the snappy trolling yacht Reliance, is the unlucky individual. There is no more ardent fisherman on the inlet than "Captain" Danes. Every spare moment he is on the water. He was one of the original members of the association and since the moment of its formation his ambition has been to land a trophy salmon of twenty pounds or over. Last season he caught scores of salmon and a number missed the twenty-pound limit by ounces only.

The other day the captain hooked a real "Button Tyee." He knew it by the tugging of the line, and when the big boy broke water "Captain" Danes saw the dream of his life fulfilled—then, just as he was reeling the prize winner in to the boat, and the salmon took the last plunge downward in his gallant fight, there was an extra large pull. No, the big fish did not get away. A marine monster—alse unknown—lay waiting, and he made a grab—and cut the salmon in two.

"Captain" Danes got half, and the seal, dogfish or ogopogo obtained the other half.

From the portion he reeled in "Captain" Danes realized that he would have won a bronse button at least, and possibly a silver trophy. Now here is the hard luck. The association officials refused to compute the full weight of the fish from the remnant that "Captain" Danes was able to produce—and if that is not hard luck, what is?

Victorian Achieves Fine Record

MRS. EDNA "NINA" NAPIER, M.A., B.L.S.

Popular Victoria resident, who has just attained her degree of Bachelor of Library Science at McGill University with the distinction of taking first marks in eight out of ten subjects, and the highest classification in all. She was awarded two prizes, one for reference work and the other for library administration. Mrs. Napier has been invited to assist in starting the Carnegie Library demonstration at Prince of Wales College, Prince Edward Island, and will spend three months there before returning to the Coast.

Sabotage Is Threatened At Project

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP).—Visitors have been barred from the power house at Muscle Shoals, Ala., by order of Major-General Lytle Brown, chief of army engineers, because of recurring reports of intended sabotage there.

General Brown, asserting no such activities had occurred as yet, tonight expressed concern lest they take place and ordered that none but known and recognized individuals be admitted.

He said his course was dictated solely by reports that such activities were threatened, and that his decision had been made to protect the government's gigantic $150,000,000 property from any who would seek to harm it.

SLEPT ALL THROUGH HER PERILOUS RIDE

CANTON, O., June 3 (CP).—Alvin Miller wondered why people were pointing at his automobile when he drove into Millersburg, seven miles from here.

Miller looked, and there was his two-year-old daughter curled up on the running board. She had been sound asleep all the way.

WANTED TO GO FISHING

PORTLAND, Ore., June 3 (CP).—Harry W. Peterson asked for a divorce in circuit court on the grounds his wife, wed to him thirty years, would not let him go fishing. His wife, he told the court, guarded the front door and his mother-in-law the back door.

CONGRESS APPROVES BILL TO REPUDIATE CONTRACTS IN GOLD

Cries of "Bad Faith" Fail to Halt Passage of Measure Permitting Payment of Obligations in Legal Tender—Senate Refuses to Eliminate Retroactive Features

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP).—Amid cries of "bad faith" and "repudiation," the Senate, today, gave final Congressional approval to the Administration's resolution, permitting payment of all contracts in legal tender money. An overwhelming coalition of Democrats and Western Republicans drove through a vote of forty-eight to twenty the measure requested by the Administration, eliminating the gold payment requirement from all contracts, public and private, either present or future.

This means that war debts, mortgages and Liberty bonds, as well as all other Governmental and private obligations, may be settled in legal tender money, obviating the requirement that gold shall be used.

READY FOR SIGNING

The resolution had already passed the House, and needs only the signatures of Vice-President Garner and Speaker Rainey before going to the White House.

Two attempts to modify the measure by eliminating its retroactive features, and to exclude Governmental obligations, were rejected during a long day of debate, 48 to 21 and 38 to 26, respectively.

To protests that the resolution would call for repudiation of Government obligations, defenders replied that the welfare of the majority was supreme, and that the Government had the right to abrogate contracts in carrying out its constitutional function of regulating money.

RED AROUND EARS

"For generations, Americans will grow red around the ears when they think of the dishonest and dishonorable things this Congress did," the Pennsylvania Republican, Reed, told his colleagues.

SCIENTISTS END SESSION

Groups Attending Meetings Here Conclude Studies With Banquet

The fifth Pacific Science Congress, that brought to the Dominion some of the keenest minds from the nations bordering on the Pacific Ocean to co-ordinate their studies in matters of science for the betterment of mankind, concluded its meetings in Victoria last night with an official banquet.

Dr. H. M. Tory, head of the congress and president of the National Research Council, presided, and introduced a number of the delegates from foreign countries who were able to deliver their addresses in their own languages. It was a unique dinner in that representatives were permitted to say what they had to say without being misunderstood because of translation difficulties.

The speakers were: Dr. Frank Adams, Montreal; Prof. Paul Chavier, of the Academy of Science, Paris, France; Dr. S. Hattai, of the Imperial Japanese University, Tokio, Japan; Dr. L. T. Ride, of the British University, of Hongkong; Dr. A. L. Day, leader of the United States delegation, and Dr. S. F. Tolmie, Premier of British Columbia.

The delegates, who have been in Victoria since last Thursday, will leave this morning for Nanaimo, en route to Vancouver, where the sessions will be continued until June 14.

FIVE YEARS FOR A FOOL

NEW YORK, June 3 (CP).—Convicted of forgery, William B. Davis said:

"Your honor, I'm not a criminal. I'm a fool."

"I agree with you," said Judge Thomas C. Kadien, Jr. "Any man of your good education who resorts to crime to obtain money is a fool. Five years."

Premier Tolmie Explains Policy Upon Irrigation

Stoppage of Heavy Drain on Provincial Exchequer by Liquidation of Debt on Ascertained Ability to Pay Is Principle of Relief Measures Considered

CLEAR-CUT explanation of the Government's viewpoint on the scaling down of irrigation loans considered uncollectable, together with the history of the debt and the Province's policy in that connection, was made yesterday by Premier Tolmie in an official statement.

Closing out of the conservation fund, with cessation of all further loans; a partial moratorium to allow irrigation districts to regain firmer positions, and the setting up of sinking funds in each area to retire the adjusted debt at maturity on an ascertained ability to pay, are chief elements in the policy outlined. The Premier's statement was as follows:

"In 1920 and succeeding years the late Government advanced money to irrigation districts in order to assist them to establish and maintain irrigation systems. It is now found that much of the land in many of these districts is absolutely incapable of producing sufficient crops to enable the owners of the land to repay the borrowed money, and in order to salvage some of the money loaned, Mr. Lougheed recommends the writing off of a portion of the debt, which it is manifest the Government will never be able to collect.

HERITAGE FROM PAST

"There is no giving away of money recommended. The money was given away or loaned in 1920 and the immediate following years. There will be no additional cost to the Province, as the money was handed out years ago by the late administration and a large part of it is irretrievably lost. The recommendation

SNOW DISAPPEARS AT BARKERVILLE

Road to Northern Mining Centre Improving—Development Work Getting Under Way

QUESNEL, June 3 (CP).—The road to Barkerville is much improved and cars are now making sixty miles in about four hours. The snow on the level around Barkerville has finally disappeared and also on the south slopes of the mountains there up to about five thousand feet.

Mining engineers representing various interested companies are due here shortly, and while it is expected that many claims staked on the snow will be allowed to revert to the Crown, development work will be proceeded with on a substantial number.

"The majority of these claims have lain idle and neglected for more than half a century," an eminent mining engineer said here, "but now that Fred Wells has proven that the Cariboo sulphides carry their values to depth, development is now warranted on a larger scale and over a much greater area."

DAILY COLONIST HAS FILM NEWS

Flashes From Over World to Be Shown at Capitol Theatre Tomorrow

News flashes from all parts of the world will be brought to Victoria through the co-operation of The Daily Colonist and the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd. These will be released at the Capitol Theatre here, in conjunction with the current feature pictures, and a remarkably fine resume of world events and happenings of today comprise the initial programme. This includes the following items: Toronto, King O'Connor takes historic race before distinguished throng. Calcutta, India, workers risk their lives on bamboo scaffold to clean monument.

Roslyn, L.I., society sees exciting Spring steeplechase at United Hunts meet, Evanston, new world's record set in hurdles at big ten track meet. Salinas, Cal., lettuce harvester invented to speed crops to market. Zurich, Switzerland, annual child fete in national costumes draws huge crowds. San Quentin, Cal., Tom Mooney leaves prison after sixteen years, in new freedom fight.

Wayne, Pa., college cadets use seven league boots for higher education. Kurachi, Japan, huge crowds watch hundreds battle in festival of sport. Cary, Ill., daring motorcyclists thrill spectators at hill-climbing contest.

This will be the first of many reels to be presented by the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd., in conjunction with The Daily Colonist, and many more interesting "shots" are already selected.

Values Set For Tariff On Fruits

OTTAWA, June 3 (CP).—Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of National Revenue, has set seasonal duty valuations for apricots, raspberries, loganberries, carrots and celery. A valuation of 2 cents a pound was placed on apricots and 3 cents a pound on raspberries and loganberries, to be effective in all cases from June 15 to August 31. The valuation for carrots was placed at 2½ cents a pound, from June 15 to February 15, and for celery, 1 cent a pound, from June 15 to February 28.

CANTONESE TROOPS KILL MANY BANDITS

CANTON, China, June 4 (AP).—Four hundred bandits, infesting the borders of Kwantung and Fukien provinces, have been killed by Canton Government troops, according to Chinese reports.

The Cantonese authorities are attempting to wipe out brigand bands which are pillaging South China.

MANY VISIT SHEEP SHOW

Chamber of Commerce Excursion to Saltspring Island Enjoyed

Members of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce and their friends made an enjoyable excursion to Ganges Harbor yesterday to attend the first annual show of the Saltspring Island Sheep Breeders' Association.

There were some thirty-eight persons in the party. These excursionists were augmented by another excursion, which came from Vancouver, and many visitors from adjacent islands.

Apart from the organized excursions, there were many private parties, and the ferryboat Cy Peck had to make extra trips to accommodate the number of persons, who took advantage of the holiday to visit Saltspring Island.

Captain M. F. Macintosh, M.P.P., officially opened the show, addressing a gathering of several hundred persons in front of the Mahon Hall.

HIGHER STANDARD

He said that the show had been held at an opportune time, when the season was well advanced for the marketing of sheep. He commended the spirit of the association in endeavoring to encourage a high standard of sheep, and expressed the hope that this endeavor would have beneficial results in the marketing of the wool and meat.

Following the official opening, the hall was thrown open for inspection. Counters displaying many attractive exhibits of craft work, particularly woollens, were favorably commented upon by the visitors. In this building a demonstration of weaving and a spinning contest were also held.

MANY CONTESTS

On the grounds, sheep shearing contests, by hand and by machine, were held, while sheep dogs competed in a race, in which sheep were rounded up and pennd.

Sheep also were judged for their points. A demonstration of meat cutting was given, while Harold Palmer, secretary of the Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce, auctioned off meat to the visitors. A softball game rounded out the afternoon's programme of entertainment. In the evening D. H. deBurg, of Prevost Island, gave an interesting talk on "Grasses and Pasture."

Adjourned Inquest Will Be Held Into Mysterious Killing

THE adjourned inquest into the death of Sue Min Jim, Chinese houseboy, who was found in a mutilated condition in the Uplands home of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. McGiverin, on May 24, will be held in Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel at 10 o'clock Monday morning, Coroner Dr. E. C. Hart will preside.

Chief interest is expected to centre around the testimony to be given by Inspector J. F. C. B. Vance, Vancouver criminologist, who was called into the case several days after the Chinese body was discovered.

One body in the morgue at Long Beach was still unidentified tonight. The last bodies recovered were those of Robert Bennett and Carl Robinson, both of Long Beach, found near the scene of the blast.

TWIST OF FATE

Robinson's wife revealed a tragic twist of fate that took her husband to his death. He had not been able to find work for several months, but yesterday he found employment in the oil field.

Chester Fear, petroleum engineer, who was driving near the Richfield plant when he saw a minor explosion, advanced the theory the blast was caused by a valve being blown off a high-pressure tank.

"Just as I saw this valve blow, I turned the other way, for this means danger," said Fear. "From the valve, gas would rush and become ignited. I know I had traveled only a half block when flames filled the air."

shattered structures upon which external trade depends. If it succeeds, its results will spread throughout the internal economy of every country and start a new era of prosperity. But if it fails, one country after another will probably turn toward a deliberate policy of organizing nationally or in associated groups, the nations sacrificing all external trade except in such commodities as cannot be produced at home, even at much higher cost.

MEDIUM REQUIRED

In addition to satisfactory political relations world trade requires a suitable medium of exchange, a properly-functioning credit system and appropriate commercial policies. The tasks of the conference will therefore concern a monetary policy, the restoration of conditions under which foreign lending can be resumed, and tariffs and trade impediments.

All are closely interdependent, but is is likely that, for convenience, the conference will divide into two main sections, a financial section covering money and credits, and an economic section covering tariffs.

Monetary discussion will probably be directed at two objects: First, obtaining greater stability of exchanges, and second, making possible a policy of "controlled reflation," that is, a policy directed toward obtaining an increase in the general level of prices to correct the fall of recent years.

AGREEMENT NECESSARY

The depreciation of the dollar has made agreement at once more obviously necessary and technically more difficult. Nothing could be more disastrous than the process of competitive currency depreciation which is threatened if no agreement is reached.

But due relations among the different exchanges are now more difficult to determine.

Market rates are an imperfect guide because they reflect not only the more enduring factors (price structure, balance of trade and balance of normal payments), but the impact of "freight movements" of short-term capital. It is the true function of an equalization fund to counteract this last factor and keep rates as nearly as possible where they would be if it did not exist.

But a true ratio also depends upon future differences of policy in different countries. If, for example, America is going to increase her prices substantially more than other countries, the relative value of the dollar will be less than if reflation is everywhere pursued to the same point. Nevertheless, the problem should not be insoluble.

CONDITIONS UNDERSTOOD

The main conditions are now understood. It is presumably realized by those who control policy that no country can continue to sell more than it buys, except to the extent to which it lends or invests the difference abroad.

It is obviously foolish to aim at stabilizing any rates which would have the effect of increasing the disequilibrium in the international balance of payments which is the main origin of the financial crisis. With this recognized, the problem is manageable.

Currencies off gold have remained reasonably stable in relation to the pound. If we exclude therefore the special question of silver and China, a triparte understanding as to the dollar, the pound and the franc would suffice. The provisional, de facto stabilization of the exchange rates of these three currencies is the first goal at which to aim.

A full legal return to the gold standard by the countries which have left is is not to be expected. This would be too hazardous until the conditions required to make the gold standard work satisfactorily are brought on and agreed upon, and have proved to be effective in practice. We may expect a serious attempt to secure a reasonable stability of exchanges on a provisional basis.

If an agreement on monetary policy and co-operation in defining currencies at provisionally agreed upon ratios are possible, the way is open for dealing with the most serious of the new impediments to world trade that have been imposed in the last two years.

In reply, Senator Borah, Idaho, said: "We must cease to pay tribute to the gold standard at the expense of the American people.

"It has been said that this resolution is repudiation," Borah added. "I'm not prepared to controvert that fact. But while the bondholder has the technical right to demand payment in gold, he must take his position with the rest of the American people in the sacrifice they have been making in the last year and a half."

PARTY LINES SPLIT

Party lines were split as the Senate argued over the honor and constitutionality of the proposal.

"If the Government agreed to pay 25.8 grains of gold, and pay less than 25.8 grains," Senator Glass, Virginia's former Treasury head, said, "it's repudiation."

Senator Barkley, Kentucky, contended "the welfare of 120,000,000 people is supreme over any group in the number."

SCOUT RALLY SUCCESSFUL

Hon. Joshua Hinchliffe Takes Salute—Sea Scouts Give Demonstration

Featured by a practical demonstration of life-saving from the sea by the Cadboro Bay Sea Scouts, combined troops of Victoria and district gathered yesterday on the Heywood Avenue grounds of Beacon Hill Park for their annual rally. Hon. Joshua Hinchliffe, Minister of Education and Lands, took the salute when the troops marched past, after which he gave a short address. St. Mary's Troop won the first day's competitions, with the Cadboro Bay Sea Scouts in second place. First Cathedral Troop was third.

Under Assistant-Scoutmaster W. R. Bardsley, the Cadboro Bay Sea Scouts performed a complete "rescue at sea." A pitch, on the grounds, was rigged out as a "ship" and a shoreline designated. The "ship," supposedly on the rocks, sent up a distress signal on its mast. The shore crew shot a rocket to the "ship" and set up a complete breeches-buoy outfit from which those on the "ship" could reach shore. A signaler from the shore crew was first to go aboard and his "wig-wagging" notified the rescue party to go ahead. All were rescued and given treatment for immersion by the Schaeffer method. The whole show was voted an extreme success.

In his address Mr. Hinchliffe told the Scouts that their movement was one of the best means of gaining extra-curricular education. He urged them to continue their work and by doing so assist themselves in becoming better equipped for the battle of life.

The programme started with a parade through the city to the grounds, where the silver bugle band of the Sea Cadets played. Competitions were soon under way and a large number of interested spectators were given a demonstration of Scout work.

FIRE LIGHTING CONTEST

The fire lighting contest was won by the St. Louis College Pathfinders. St. Mary's were second and St. Luke's third. In the signaling competition, First Cathedral Troop won first place, while St. Mary's were a close second. First Chinese gained the third position. Yeoman of Signals George Lipscombe, of the Royal Canadian Navy, acted as judge.

Cadboro Bay Sea Scouts were the winners of the tent-pitching competition, while St. Mary's managed to secure second place. St. Matthias' were third. Major J. W. Gibson, R.C.O.C., was the judge for this event.

FIRST AID AWARD

After deadlocking for first place with Cadboro Bay Sea Scouts, St. Paul's Troop were awarded second place in the first aid competition. First Cathedral Troop were third. E. J. Harwood and W. Allison, of the First Battalion, Canadian Scottish Regiment, judged this competition.

Interested spectators were H. T. Ravenhill, for many years a Scout executive here, and William Solway, of Vancouver, the executive commissioner for British Columbia.

This morning at 9:45 o'clock the troops will hold a church parade to Christ Church Cathedral, where Very Rev. Cecil S. Quainton, Dean of Columbia, will conduct a special service.

Uncle: "And what are you going to be when you grow up, John?"

Bury Crocodile in State With Native Boy in His Interior

Child Whisked to Death While Mother Bathing in Borneo River—Reptile Caught, Killed and Interred With Religious Ceremony

By GORDON SINCLAIR

KIMANIS, Borneo.—A fiery red sun dropped behind threatening purple clouds as a Borneo muezzin called the faithful to sunset prayer and to a funeral—the funeral of a crocodile! The quavering, cracked voice sang out the everlasting what-of-it of Mohammedanism: "Allah, Allah Akbar, there is but one god . . . what is written is written."

WRAPPED IN WHITE

Up from the river bank wrapped in virgin white came the body of the crocodile. Four women stood over the body moaning and weeping and ripping their flashy clothes. It was the end of a hope for them; the end of an exciting day for me.

Ian Riddell, a Scot, manages the 5,000-acre Kimanis plantation, eight miles off the Borneo railway, which runs once a week if it gets enough passengers. They don't necessarily want the passengers to pay fares. They want them to help push the train up hills.

Our tramp trading ship which breezed up the Borneo coast, popping in here and there where cargo or passengers looked likely, had made a haul in Jesselton, and it looked like two or three days to get the load aboard. Riddell was leaving for his diggings, so I trailed along for the train ride. It was a four-mile walk through the jungle to the plantation proper, but coolies with sedan chairs met us and we jogged in like supreme high rajahs or something. All the way the coolies were jabbering an excited sing-song.

TAKEN UNAWARES

"One of the tappers killed a crocodile," the boss explained. "He was washing some clothes in the river when a big crocodile swept in and grabbed him by the leg. There were several other washers there and they seized the man before he was pulled right into the water. They managed to pull the man loose, but his leg was horribly shredded. They put him on the bank and started away for a stretcher when the crocodile came up with a swish and grabbed him again. This time by the shoulder. The men fought and pulled again and once more drove the crocodile off, but the Chinese died."

"You got lots of crocks around your place?" "Not that I know of, but lots of these." He pointed to a pair of imbecilic looking orang-outans gravely scratching themselves in a tree. They were only mildly curious about us.

We spotted a dozen others before reaching the plantation. They all seemed much bigger than the orang in zoos.

A SAVAGE SETTING

The plantation was framed in a gorgeous but savage jungle setting over the muddy river. There was a broad balcony, and I sat there learning that the most ferocious and most feared beast in the Borneo jungle is a cow. Yes sir, a cow. A certain devilish black cow, which tracks down men and gores the life out of them.

Out in the river a woman was bathing. She was all dressed, but sort of soaping around the edges and calling that a bath. Her little boy, age six, was paddling at the water edge. Between the boy and his mother a Chinaman was washing some shirts.

All of us, at the same instant, saw the black swish of a speeding crocodile. It came through the water like a torpedo, ignored the woman, upset the man, and seized the boy who let out one terrifying shriek. The crocodile lifted him high in the air. The boy was caught straight across the middle, his feet dangling out one side, his still screaming head out the other.

The mother came crying like a she-wolf for the great beast. Her own safety meant nothing to her. All that pagan blood which leaves Borneo one of the few remaining cannibal islands on earth, welled up in that woman as she slashed through the water to her boy. The great reptile dived. Riddell rushed to the house for a shotgun. I hurried down to the bank. Workers came hurrying in from all directions. A few twisted wisps of blood floated up. It seemed all over.

TRY LIVE BAIT

But those workers dropped everything else and got hooks, lassoes, snares and rifles. They waited an hour watching the place like eagles. Then they brought down some chickens. Live, infuriated hens. One of these, squawking in indignation, was thrown into the river. It splashed badly about, was gradually carried down-stream, but nothing else happened. Another hen was tossed in. It kicked up a great fuss, too, and managed to reach shore about fifty yards below the throw-in spot. I went to retrieve it and there came across as gruesome a sight as you'll see outside a war. The lower part of the boy's body lay partly stuck in the mud. I leaned down to pick it up. Before I'd completed the bend I saw the mighty tail of the crock lash out for me in a mighty muscular crescent.

It missed. Another slosh came in from the other side. Quicker than a boxer can strike with two fists, the knobs at the end barely nipped me on the knee. Just a bare touch, but it bled like a razor slash. The others, hearing the commotion, had come down, but when we looked again, the bit of the boy's body was gone.

We waited over this spot about an hour, then tossed in a chicken. Instantly it was seized. Another chicken was slaughtered on the bank. A double-sided meat hook was slipped inside, fastened with a rope and tossed in.

HOOK, LINE AND SINKER

Wham! We had that crocodile. He made one grab and we had him. No crocodile has a tongue. What they grab they swallow quick and easy—and this one had swallowed a meat hook. We started to heave and yank him ashore, and I looked for deathly splashes and hullaballoo, but the great reptile with a hook in its belly came up like a coward.

The boy's mother rushed in with the fury of a tigress and battered the big brute about the eyes and skull. Crocodiles, cold blooded and cruel, have, instead of ears, a soft spot in their skull just like a newborn babe. The vibrations on that tell them when enemies are about, how deep they are, what's stirring near them. The woman knew this well. She deliberately clubbed that soft spot until the brute, with one convulsive lashing leap, turned belly up to the Borneo sun and died.

A man poised over the carcass with a beautiful kriss, sharp as a razor, hooked like a boomerang. "No," the mother screamed. "No, no. I don't want to see."

PLANNED A HUNT

The plantation boss, upset by this double death in a week, ordered the crocodile thrown back in the river and planned a big hunt for next day. Then we walked up the slippery hill to the big porch again.

Soon the Mohammedan priest came. He explained that they could not throw the body back in the water. No; that body was really the body of the boy. It would have to be buried with full rites of the mosque. It would have to be wrapped in white and followed by mourners. That was no crocodile; that was the boy.

So it was that at the sunset call to prayer, moaning women and tight-jawed men struggled with a heavy wrapped body up a muddy hill.

B.C. LOSES IN TOMATO RULING

June 10 set as Date of Application of Protection Against Dumping

In a telegram to Premier Tolmie yesterday, Hon. E. B. Ryckman, of Ottawa, said the Dominion would stand by the date of June 10 as that upon which imposition of a fair market value for imported tomatoes would be placed in effect. British Columbia growers were similarly instructed.

The telegram said that the Dominion had been advised that imported tomatoes had advanced a dollar per case, representing about $1.15 in Canadian funds. The protection sought by British Columbia, it was argued, meant a difference of ninety-six cents per case. Hothouse tomatoes were quoted in the telegram as selling at thirty-five cents per pound, retail. In view of these circumstances, the June 10 date appeared reasonable, Mr. Ryckman stated.

DIFFER ON PRICES

Provincial officials pointed out in their reply, that according to the Canadian Fruit and Market Bulletin, issued at Ottawa, imported Mexican tomatoes, produced by peon labor, were selling at $3.25 a case, wholesale, on May 12, and $3 on May 19 and May 26, original pack; while repacked, the wholesale prices were from $3.50 up at Winnipeg, Regina and Saskatoon in the same period.

The contention of the British Columbia growers is that the Federal authorities have been incorrectly advised, though little can be done about it at this date. The impost was applied at May 15 last year, and British Columbia growers asked for its application at May 10 this year, stating that on June 10 its protection would be valueless to this province.

Ontario growers supported the stand taken by British Columbia.

PIONEER WOMAN CALLED TO REST

Mrs. Alice Cheal, of Hillcrest Farm, Cobble Hill, Came to Island Forty Years Ago

There passed away on Saturday at her residence, Hillcrest Farm, Cobble Hill, Mrs. Alice Cheal, widow of William Cheal. Mrs. Cheal was in her sixty-eighth year. She had long been a resident of Cobble Hill, and had many friends in Victoria.

Born in Hastings, England, Mrs. Cheal came to Vancouver Island, after her husband and his brother had come to settle. She arrived here forty years ago to find that her husband had taken up some land in a thickly wooded and sparsely settled district.

She lived to see the development of Cobble Hill as an agricultural centre, and her farm one of the show places on this island.

Surviving the deceased are two grandchildren at home; a nephew, residing at Koksilah, and a niece in California.

The funeral will take place Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in St. John's Church, Cobble Hill. Interment will be made in the family plot in the churchyard.

FUNERAL SERVICE HELD

The funeral of John Wilks took place yesterday afternoon, and was entirely Masonic, service being conducted by Bro. Cecil M. Parrott, worshipful master of Victoria Columbia Lodge, No. 1, A.F. & A.M. There was a very large attendance, and members of the order attended in a body. The remains were forwarded last evening to Vancouver for cremation.

KINSMEN DECLARE CONTEST WINNERS

Miss Sydney Fatt, of 601 Trutch Street, and Miss E. Kilby, of 3316 Glasgow Avenue, were the winners in the Kinsmen estimating contest held in connection with the recent Kinsmen "Karnival." Another person is entitled to a prize, but so far the officials of the contest have been unable to determine the name.

Owing to the three-way tie, all winners having estimated 583 pieces, the money, which was to be used for providing a trip to Honolulu and one to Alaska, will be divided three ways. Officials of the club will allow thirty days for the unknown winner to claim the portion of the prize. There were 588 pieces in the jar.

Noted Canadian To Address Club

The Women's Canadian Club will have a meeting on Thursday, June 15, for the purpose of hearing a distinguished Canadian, Norman Sommerville, K.C., on the subject of "Recent Observations in Central Europe." Mr. Sommerville, who has considerable reputation as a speaker, was in Europe and the Motherland a year ago, and while there received a command to go to Buckingham Palace to receive the thanks of Her Majesty for an address he had just given in London. He is chairman of the central executive of the Canadian Red Cross. The soloist will be Mrs. John Clough.

Unsolicited letter from Ford owner tells of low oil and gasoline consumption

Ford Motor Company
of Canada, Limited
East Windsor, Ontario

As you are aware, I recently exchanged my 1932 V-8 for a 1933 V-8 and thought you might be pleased to learn that my new car (the fourth Ford car I have owned) has more than met expectations.

It has always been a matter of peculiar interest to me to ascertain the mileage per gallon each of the cars I have owned and it has been my practice to keep an accurate record.

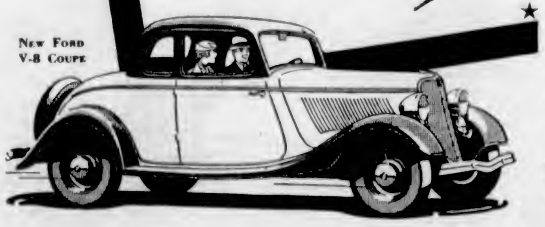

Naturally, with the new 1933 V-8, with its larger body, longer wheelbase and increased horsepower over last year's model, I felt I could not expect to get as many miles per gallon. Imagine my satisfaction and surprise to find, by actual test, that I was able to secure an increased mileage per gallon of gas.

Having in mind the statements of representatives of other makes of cars, that the new 1933 V-8 would not give more than 12 or 15 miles to the gallon, I thought you might be interested in the record of my new car to date.

My new V-8 has covered 1694 miles and only 68 gallons of gasoline were put into the tank; a remarkable record, particularly as it was made in breaking in a new car with its extra idling, etc. This shows 23.44 miles to the gallon, and I know that for certain periods I was getting 26½ miles to the gallon. During this period I used 3 pints of oil.

You are at liberty to make use of this information in whole or in part, and I desire to state that this information has been entirely unsolicited by any member of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, and is given with but the single purpose of giving credit for performance so eminently satisfactory.

MRS. PETER McARTHUR

The Colonist was honored yesterday by a visit from Mrs. Peter McArthur, widow of the most delightful of all Canadian journalists, essayists and humorists. The late Peter McArthur, who died suddenly a few years ago in the prime of life and at the zenith of his popularity and fame, was a native of Ekfrid Township in Western Ontario. His grandfather settled on a government allotment, built a log house and cleared the greater portion of the land. The old log house still stands, and is a shrine at which many literary celebrities from other parts of Canada and from all parts of the world gather annually to pay their respects to the memory of one who, in some respects, was one of the greatest of Canadians.

Peter McArthur did not remain on the land cleared and brought under cultivation by his forefathers. Although he was a lover of the soil and of all the products of nature, as his essays testify, his natural inclinations were towards literary pursuits. But after he had established his fame by contributions to some of the most popular of the periodicals of Great Britain and the United States and resided for a time in great cities, the call of the family acres became too imperative to be resisted. The lure which could not be denied was not the "hills of home," for Western Ontario is a flat, though opulent country. It was the call of the home of childhood and youth, the scene of many happy and tender memories, which settled the matter. So when he died Peter McArthur was the happy and contented owner of the homestead of his grandfather and his father.

A volume of the collected essays of Mr. McArthur is one of the text-books in the schools of British Columbia; it is a charming pen picture of life on a typical Western Ontario farm.

Mrs. McArthur is visiting Miss Fidler of Ten Mile Point, who is a contributor to newspapers and an intimate friend for many years. The distinguished visitor will contribute a series of articles on Western subjects to The London Advertiser.

NOTABLE ANNIVERSARY

In the year 1858, seventy-five years ago, Victoria was but a backwoods settlement, whose inhabitants were mostly native Indians and white adventurers in search of gold. In those remote days the natives were still practically savages and the white men probably were not many degrees higher in the scale of civilization. At any rate in those far-off days we may assume that the new mining camp on the shores of the Pacific was not materially different as far as the refinements of civilized life are concerned from the American mining communities so graphically described by Mark Twain and his editorial contemporary Bret Harte.

During the past week modern Victoria has been honored by the presence of many distinguished persons whose lives have been devoted to pursuits for the advancement of science and literature. During the week there also has been held a celebration of an event which had a permanent influence upon the early spiritual and religious life of the community, an influence which still persists in the later life of the community.

Seventy-five years ago Montreal was the centre of the Catholic Church in Canada. Even in those early days in the history of a nation which was destined to become continental in its proportions Montreal was also a centre of culture and refinement. But the Catholic Church is always represented by its spiritual agents in the outposts of civilization.

When the pioneer sisters of St. Ann left Montreal to establish institutions for healing the sick and enlightening the ignorant and arrived in Victoria seventy-five years ago, we can imagine the conditions which they left compared to the conditions they were about to accept must have been rather depressing, physically if not spiritually.

In Montreal the devoted women must have been accustomed to at least such comforts and refinements as were consistent with their vows. Although they were delicate women, unaccustomed to "roughing it," which is the lot of all pioneers, the sight of the little cabin which was destined to be their home and the centre of their high calling, did not prevent them from setting about their chosen mission of enlightening the ignorant and healing the sick. They offered themselves as a sacrifice in order to serve.

And so the work begun by the pioneer sisters seventy-five years ago has been prosecuted by their successors ever since. It was therefore fitting that there should be held a celebration of the Diamond Jubilee of St. Ann's, of Victoria, with the original little cabin as a shrine, surrounded by the magnificent buildings, the principal building devoted to the divine mission of healing the sick and the other buildings to educational and devotional purposes.

The Catholic community of Victoria has reason to be thankful for the success of the mission of the devoted Sisters of St. Ann—and the non-Catholic elements have shared in the ministering graces of the sisterhood, for in works of charity and mercy the church knows no distinction of persons or denominations.

COMPLEXITY ROUTS SIMPLICITY

In the beginning simplicity was the essence of all human institutions. In the end (which of course is not yet) complexity is the bane of all human institutions. When democracy was in flower the only court was the court of public opinion. When the majority of the people registered a decision, there was no appeal. That was a simple system and quick in action.

But political machines are like all other machines. In the beginning of printing a press was a marvel of simplicity. A modern printing press is a marvel of complicity. None but experts have mastered the complexities of its machinery, although to the novice it may appear to do its swift work without human supervision. The democratic political machine is something like that, and it might do its work well notwithstanding its increasing complexity if human inexperts could be prevented from interfering with it.

The fathers of the American republic of course would never have incorporated prohibition in the constitution they fabricated for regulation of the affairs of the country, but if they had adopted an equivalent to the eighteenth amendment and wanted to get rid of it, they would have made quick work of the job. The fact is evident that a vast majority of the present people of the United States want to get rid of prohibition, but they cannot do it—at least not immediately.

It was because of difficulty in repealing the eighteenth amendment that the president recommended and Congress accepted what is known as 3.2 per cent beer. This recommendation was intended to satisfy the people until prohibition could be completely expunged from the constitution. It was a stop-gap or a subterfuge to overcome the constitutional prohibition of the sale or consumption of any intoxicating liquor. As a matter of fact, there is no doubt that 3.2 per cent beer is at least mildly intoxicating. The judgment of no court or resolution of Congress can overrule a chemical fact.

The situation in the United States regarding 3.2 per cent beer has been complicated by the judgment of one state supreme court judge that the sale of the beer is contrary to the provisions of the constitution. That situation may be further complicated if any objecting state appeals to the United States Supreme Court for a decision on the same matter, because there is some doubt about the legality of the sale of the beer even under authority of a Congressional resolution.

There also may be complications about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. While a vast majority of the people of the United States have demanded that they shall be permitted to drink the things they will, thirteen states may get together and declare that prohibition must remain a law of the country. Which is to say, that the voice of a minority of the people may be more powerful than the voice of an overwhelming majority; that the complexities of the political machinery may defeat the purposes of the designers of the machine. Complexity culminates in perplexity.

HITLER ADVANCING

On the continent of Europe Sunday is a political as well as a religious institution. It is a great day for political speeches, possibly a greater day for political speeches than for sermons. Then when the political orators are exhausted there are elections, also held on Sundays. A week ago there was an election in Danzig, an alleged free city which really is a sort of European Tom Tiddler's Ground. The affairs of the free city of Danzig are supposed as a matter of courtesy to be administered by the League of Nations.

In the election in Danzig last Sunday what may develop into another shot at the prestige of the League of Nations was fired by the free voters of the free city, for a dispatch says that the city was captured by the Nazis. As the Nazis are a German political party it is quite possible that the leader of the Nazis may consolidate the position thus attained by declaring that Danzig is what it used to be and what it ought still to be, a German city. In political party warfare as in another form of warfare it is considered sound tactics to begin a campaign by capturing the outposts.

At any rate there is no doubt that the citizens of Danzig consider themselves German citizens, and prefer thus to be considered rather than free citizens of a city without any recognized status in the world. Danzig and the Polish corridor seem destined to become thorns in the flesh of the League of Nations as well as problems for other parts of Europe. Hitler and his forces, notwithstanding occasional public modification of their bellicose speeches, will hardly be content until they have seized a prominent place in the sun for Germany. If the London Conference should succeed in solving the economic problems of the world, Europe will still be staring into the heart of some political problems.

Choose the way that seems the best, however rough it may be. Custom will render it easy and agreeable. —Pythagoras.

A friend is worth all the hazards we can run.—Young.

Old-Time Memories

By R. T. WILLIAMS

Referring again to the foundations that were laid in early times by our legislators, it is well to review some of the efforts made that, had they been carried out, would have been of great benefit in the building up of the Island generally. Dwelling for a moment on the suggestions of a constructive nature, at best only a bare outline of the good work done can be given, starting with Hon. Amor de Cosmos. It was he who advocated the buying of Alaska (purchased by the United States for $7,200,000). Mr. de Cosmos was sneered at for even dreaming for one moment that the Government of Canada would even think of such a thing. He was also first, last and at all times a firm advocate of the bridging of Seymour Narrows. In both the above efforts he was head and shoulders (mentally) above his opponents. The thoughtless minority ruled then, as it does today in many matters.

Now for something that affects Victoria chiefly. At one time it was Henry Nathan, Jr., M.P., in Ottawa, who pressed more than once for the building of a canal to connect Portage Inlet, head of the Arm, with Esquimalt Harbor. Just for a moment follow the vision Mr. Nathan had of increasing the boating capacity of the Arm by many fold. A complete flushing of the waters, especially freshening up those of our harbor. The cost is a trifle compared to the vast benefit to be derived from such an undertaking.

It is true that in the expenditure of money on public works, if there was some semblance of an equal distribution of the taxpayers' contribution as between the Mainland and the Island, there would be little to complain of. For a long time it has not been so. Expenditure on the Mainland, if continued, will rob the Island of any chance of quick development. This fault lies at the door of both the Dominion and the Provincial Governments, the Dominion Government in not carrying out the statutory agreement made in connection with public works on this Island (dating from 1910). Not one-tenth of what the Dominion promised has been expended, while on the Mainland more than double the amount promised has been spent. On the other hand, the Provincial Government has studiously seen to it that $2 out of every $3 of our Island taxes has been disbursed on the Mainland. Within a short radius of Vancouver (taking Provincial Government expenditures) thousands have been spent in building bridges. The Craigflower and the proposed Gorge Bridge would not be a drop in the bucket compared to them. Yet that trifle of a Gorge Bridge is such a huge undertaking! ! !

Turning from mundane things and following right up to date thought and the using of the light of Arcturus in connection with the Chicago fair, we find that even in ancient days Arcturus was known. Job, chapter 38, verse 32, says: "Canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?" It is approximately two hundred billion miles away, traveling at the rate of about four million miles a day, one hundred and fifty times greater than the speed of a cannon ball. If it were possible to put our earth in the position of running a race with Arcturus, we would find that Arcturus would gain on us at the rate of many miles a second. We would be beaten before we started. To find this beautiful star (a magnificent sun) follow the handle of the dipper (a prolongation of the tail of the great bear) which points the way until you come to that brightest star now in the southwestern heavens (in the early evening south and very high). That's Arcturus. It is well to give credit to whom credit is due. This star has been carefully studied by Guillemin, Herschel, Flammarion, Halley and others; also the astronomers at Rome and the wonderful work of our own observatory must not be overlooked.

ern heavens (somewhat south and high). That's Arcturus. It is well to give credit to whom credit is due. This star has been carefully studied by Guillemin, Herschel, Flammarion, Halley and others; also the astronomers at Rome and the wonderful work of our own observatory must not be overlooked.

The light of the star was utilized by those most interested in the Chicago fair. As an advertisement it is a good one; from a scientific point of view (ignoring the labors of others) is quite a different matter.

This week has been one of special importance as it marks the 75th anniversary of the arrival of the Sisters of St. Ann. The noble and self-sacrificing labors of those pioneers will ever be remembered by all, especially by those who have seen the institution grow as from a tiny seed, blossoming into a splendid organization to help us all in every phase of life. May they have continued success in the years to come. They certainly bring to mind real old-time memories.

A week of fond remembrance
Of those we hold most dear,
Whose loving work and patience,
Have brought God's presence near.

British Columbia's Ode to the Sisters of St. Ann on the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of Their Arrival at Victoria

June 5, 1858

My forests standing silent sentinels,
Beheld the first unfoldings of God's plan,
And calmly watched from their appointed place,
The rise and the ascendency of man.

In quest of richer homes in new-found lands—
These men would gain through hardships all untold—
Came dauntless trappers seeking dreamed-of wealth,
And brave adventurers in search of gold.

Ceaseless their toil through weary days and nights,
Struggling and bent beneath the stagg'ring load,
Sometimes the light of hope made clear their path,
Sometimes a grim despair their only goad.

Then one, wise pastor to a straggling flock,
Felt grave compassion on the multitude,
And like his Master, mindful of their souls,
Modeste Demers asked: "Whence shall these find food?"

From out the motherland of old Quebec,
Clear came the answer to his urgent plea,
And Esther Sureau Blondin's Sisterhood
Sent four young lives to share his ministry.

The Martyr's courage and the Faith of Saints,
Lent seemly temp'ring to their joyous youth,
And they set forth with eager hearts and hands,
To serve their Lord in very deed and truth.

And one was named for Love, and one for Light,
Symbolic of a mad world's need for prayer,
And one was named for purity of life,
And one recalled the Guardian Angel's care.

And so you came with gifts of zeal and love,
And gracious comforting's for every need,
Without a sister's sweet solicitude,
The Brotherhood of Man were poor indeed

Welcome I gave you, and my forest wealth
Formed your first shelter and your glad retreat,
Little you asked, but lavishly you gave,
All that was yours, in sacrifice complete.

You found the native children of my heart,
And tamed with gentle rule their savag'ry,
Brightening their days with every useful art,
Calming their souls with God's Humanity.

Kindly the noble Douglas marked your worth,
Filling all trusts of valiant womanhood—
The sick and the afflicted comforted,
The orphan and the exile understood.

And his physician at the friendly Fort,
Sought out your aid in many times of stress,
And found both willing hearts and deft, skilled hands,
To serve, to soothe, to comfort and to bless.

And through the years came men with broken lives,
Decrepid, poor, and derelict, and old,
To linger safe within your shelt'ring walls,
And live again the thrilling search for gold.

With dauntless spirit, and increasing bands
Your zealous numbers gave unfailingly
The wealth of mercy, tenderness and care,
That holds the sum of truest charity.

And monuments to learning and to health,
Transcending dreams of days that were to be,
Bear living witness through the changing land,
To humble lives of prayerful industry.

The years have passed in Time's relentless course,
And many souls have reached the Heavenly Bourne
And noble tales of toil and sacrifice,
The annals of those distant days adorn.

Douglas, Demers, and Helmcken, pioneers,
Linked with their names upon my history's scroll,
There shall be graven "Sisters of St. Ann, Strength to the weary, Courage to the Soul."

—Frances Ebbs-Canavan.

'Slams and Salaams'

By H. T. M.

"With a dextrous twist of his flexible wrist" . . . and then? . . . Tock!

Behold Judge Lampman—smiling, and twice as cool as ice—stepping off the first "tee," at the Ardmore Golf Club, after trouncing an insouciant two-hundred yard drive, down No. 1 fairway! Was this the calm, trite, judicious and perfect method of officially opening a new golf course—or am I still on "U's" and "pothooks"?

That drive was a masterpiece! The Judge had just replied—crisply and smoothly—to Mr. J. J. White's (the club's president) introductory speech—(that in itself, requires no mean amount of nerve and acumen!)—and then, to clout that ball down the fairway, as fairly and squarely as he might dispatch some miscreant, to "thirty days" in the "cooler"—well, "Salaams" just won't begin to cover a deed of that Olympian calibre!

Then, Mrs. Lampman (after the applause simmered, down) received a bouquet from some charming little person—and then, of course, the applause simmered, up again. But, after the second "simmering down," Messrs. Gravlin, Marling, Deildal, and Major Angus, took turns at trying to imitate Judge Lampman's golden example — and thus, an "opening" exhibition match, began twisting its amb'guous way, over the soothing little course.

All this happened at 2:30, yesterday, beneath a sun that would cheer a skeleton—and there were scads of gay people—and lots of nice tea, with buns and cakes and "sangwidges," and no end of "what have yous"—and everyone seemed very, very, happy. And now, in closing, may we salaam Mr. Sisson (club secretary), who (vows the mystic voice of Rumour), in his quiet, determined manner, has squandered both brawn and brain, in successful efforts to lick this course into shape—and get it going?

Can you swallow a few more "acid drops," concerning "Naughtie Nellie" (Glover)? Please try, because there are two sides to every question, and, this morning, came a very sincere letter from Mrs. E. A. Nixon—not so much in defence of Nell Glover—but more in the form of a quiet appeal to the Press, to well, just to be sporting, and pipe down, a bit.

Mrs. Nixon pointed out that the "grand rapids" of ridicule that have lately been foaming through local presses, are not only "harsh irritants" to the bosom of the wayward Nell (whom, states Mrs. Nixon, is a very sick person)—but, are also nitric acid, on the luster of the whole Oxford Movement.

Nell, of course, literally screeched for trouble, and, unless I'm far beyond the final stages of mental disintegration, I believe I'm correct in saying that she got it! But Nell deserved it! She was very, very naughty—and those that are very, very naughty, invariably end up with a spanking—so it's just too bad if Nell's now tingling, from "stem to gudgeon."

I'm neither hoisting nor lowering any ensign to the heft of the Oxford Movement—I'm a very sincere heathen—but there seems no reason that the Group should suffer, just because one of it's disciples have tried to become an over-night "Voltaire," and failed. The Group were not aware of Nell's poisonous little barbes, until they suddenly poked through the columns of the daily press—and we feel certain, that had the Group even suspected such felonies were brewing, they'd have sat pretty whole-heartedly ("ever" tried 'sitting, whole-heartedly'?), on the caustic Mrs. Glover. But, Mrs. Nixon's letter is the sincerest thing that I've seen for a long time. Sincerity is something to be deeply respected. Back of sincerity, lies courage. Let's couple these two qualities, sincerity and courage, with a golden chain, and give them a hearty "salaam"?

And, on the strength of that, let's forget about "Naughtie Nellie," and pick on something else.

Mrs. Nixon opens her letter with, "Of course you will tire of your little joke, and doubtless find a new one!" Quite right. We've had our fun. Nell's now doubtless bending harmlessly over a brew of "Yorkshire puddin'"—so let's forgive and forget her (entirely)?

And now, let me publish the contribution, signed "A.C.N.," that accompanied my "scolding"—but, in future, not another word (from me at any rate), to the further crumbling of Nellies' ruins!

THE PEOPLE SAT IN DARKNESS
By A.C.N.

Appeal to the Lord for His laughter—
Who made the running waters—
And the virulent greens
Of the Spring's new sheens—
Can you match them in wit or in humour?

Appeal to the Lord for his courage—
Oh! trivial hating surcharge—
The laughter life brings,
And the gay song it sings—
Can you share with the brother who blunders?

Appeal to the Lord for His children—
All hungry and foolish and when
Self-conscious and proud,
What a jumbling crowd—
Can you guide them and feed them with love?

It's an abssymal drop, from the above, to the Four Marx Brothers—but it's got to be done. Zeppo, we see, has been victimized to the merry tune of thirty thousand "berries," by some big, bold, burly robbers! This may, or may not be, just as it should be. The Marx Bros. will not miss $30,000—in fact, in many respects they already owe a great deal more than that, to the Public. But, somehow or other, this particular piece of piracy, seems rather amusing. The idea of a Marx Brothers' dinner-party being "stuck-up"—and the guests being bound and gagged—and then the locking-up and barricading of Zeppo, et al, in a clothes closet, smacks somewhat of their own barbaric style of comedy, with the difference that the price of admission was $30,000 instead of thirty cents. (What on earth would a dinner-party, thrown by the Marx Bros., be like, anyway? Castor-oil in the soup, India rubber sweetbreads, trained mongooses (should be, mongeese), snapping your ankles, under the table—and what next? At least, such an affair would not likely remind us of a "sessional dinner," at Government House—er, would it?

When Dr. Coultas makes a Plate for you, it fits so snugly, and yet so comfortably, that soon you forget its presence in your mouth. It is as natural in appearance and as satisfactory as teeth you might have had since childhood. These better quality and better fitting plates are very reasonably priced.

What's New In Bookland

By MARION I. ANGUS

"To the North," (Alfred A. Knopf), By Elizabeth Bowen.

Whether the attraction of opposites be a good or an evil thing, the story of the collision of two conflicting personalities has unlimited possibilities for the clever author, and Elizabeth Bowen has made the most of her opportunity in this fascinatingly subtle book. The conversation is brittle, even at times bordering on the fantastic, but it is always mentally stimulating and sometimes even heady, while the characters themselves delight the mind though not the heart. The atmosphere is sophisticated without being consciously smart, which is the effect too many authors achieve in writing a book of this nature.

"To the North" is the story of Emmeline, negative, solitary and virginal, and Markie, lowish, sensuous and vital, and the inevitable conflict that followed their surrender to passion. The two never should have met, much less become intimate, for the author says, "The impact of Markie upon her was disproportionate with her life. No one had troubled her, something in her had forbidden anything but indirectness and delicacy. A splinter of ice in the heart is bombed out rather than thawed out."

It was through Cecelia, a young widow and Emmeline's sister-in-law, that the lovers met and so diverse were their characters that it never occurred to Cecelia, deep in the throes of her love for Julian Tower and striving to escape the spiritual domination of her dead husband, Henry, that there could be any relationship, even the slightest, between Emmeline and Markie. In any case, although the two young women lived in the same house, they had never interfered with one another's lives, nor closely contacted one another's friends, so the damage was done before Cecelia was even aware of its imminence.

Markie, who had always extracted full, sensual enjoyment from life, soon perceived the impossibility of a permanent union between Emmeline and himself, but something in her aroused a fear in him that was almost physical. This was not, he saw, a light affair; its consequences would be incalculable. "She had, as he saw, stepped in Paris clear of the every-day, of conduct with its guarantees and necessities, into the region of the immoderate, where we are less ourselves. Here there are no guarantees. Tragedy is the precedent; tragedy confounding life with its masterful disproportion. Here figures cast unknown shadows; passion knows no crime, only its own movement; steel and cord go with the kiss. Innocence walks with violence; violence is innocent, cold as fate; between the mistress' kiss and the blade's is a hair's breadth only, and no disparity; every door leads to death. . . . The curtain comes down, the book closes—but who is to say this is not so? . . ."

And so Emmeline returns towards "The North," which in this case refers to the "cold, outlying regions of personal solitude" and Markie learns that his fears of Emmeline were by no means unfounded.

In addition to the two sets of lovers are several interesting characters—the ubiquitous Lady Waters, whose chief joy in life is interfering with other people's (especially lovers') lives; the adolescent Pauline, Julian's schoolgirl niece, of whom Cecelia thought, "It is bad enough to be a woman, but girls of that age should never have been born," as well as Pauline's efficient girl friend Dorothea, whose speciality was soothing fathers and uncles when they came to visit the school, as well as several minor characters who make brief appearances.

The time used is Pacific standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table, the line rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

The height is in feet and tenths of a foot, measured from the average level of low water.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily British Colonist of June 4, 1883)

Plumper Pass Drowning—An unidentified man was drowned yesterday when he jumped overboard from the schooner Discovery while the vessel was proceeding through Plumper Pass. Captain Collinson, master of the Discovery, planned in fully clothed, in an attempt to rescue the man.

New Anglican Church—Work on the new Anglican Church in the Lake District will be started on Monday. It was learned from church authorities yesterday. Contributions of settlers in and around the district have made the church possible.

School Teachers' Examiners—William Fraser Tolmie, J.P., and Hector McKenzie Strambera, J.P., were appointed yesterday to act with the Superintendent of Education at the forthcoming examination of teachers for the public schools.

Retirement Announced—W. B. Kyle, of the C.P.R. Co., will retire from the service shortly to go into business of his own in New Westminster. Mr. Vincent, the company's agent at Yale, will succeed Mr. Kyle.

Tells What Science Has Done for Forestry Here

Professor F. M. Knapp, of B.C. University, Addresses Scientists Congress—Relates Early Problems in Logging Industry

Professor F. Malcolm Knapp, Department of Forestry, University of British Columbia, delivered a highly-interesting paper on the "Recent Application of Science and Engineering to Forestry" at the Pacific Science Congress here yesterday.

Dr. Knapp confined his address to cover the role of science and engineering in logging on the Pacific Coast of North America, the problem in this region being primarily one of transportation.

Dense stands of Douglas fir on land usually broken up by rough hills and narrow valleys with steep bridges and deep ravines, streams too small or precipitous for river driving, and lack of snow for sled hauling, preclude the use of ordinary-wheeled vehicles for log transport and forced the adoption of mechanized methods which, for size, power and speed in log-getting, are found nowhere else in the world. Dr. Knapp went into a review of the industry which began one hundred years ago, hand methods being used. Hand-logging, however, ceased to be profitable when the most accessible timber had been stripped from an area two or three hundred feet from the shore.

EARLY PROBLEMS

The problem of transportation then arose and oxen were used, followed by skids. As the timber became more difficult to reach, however, profits became lower, and it was not until the '80's and '90's that the steam donkey engine was improved and adapted to logging. By 1910, forestry schools were starting departments in logging engineering, as the industry had become a big business with engineering problems to be solved and trained men were needed.

In 1915 the high-lead system was generally adopted on the Pacific Coast, and mass production had been extended to the industry, with a consequent bad fire hazard. Broadcast burning had to be resorted to to remove the slash. Natural reforestation had become increasingly difficult and, to sum up, the years between 1915 and 1930 were a period of maximum damage to the forests of the west coast of this continent.

LOGGING COSTS

The question of logging costs now cropped up, and a major research by the United States in 1931 revealed that logging costs rise rapidly with a decrease in the size of the log, especially for logs below 250 board-feet content. It costs nearly as much to yard a 200-foot log as it does to yard one containing 1,000 board-feet. There is a maximum yarding distance for each type of machine beyond which it is not economical to go. On the average for distances up to approximately 600 feet the smaller, low-powered high-lead machinery shows the lowest unit cost of production. Between 600 and about 1,000 feet heavier, higher-powered high-lead engines give the lowest yarding costs, while beyond this distance the still heavier sky-line systems are most efficient.

TRACTOR LOGGING

Tractor logging for distances beyond 500 feet shows a lower yarding cost than any other type of logging machinery, and it may be used efficiently for distances even greater than the sky-line system. For very short yarding the lightest type of high-lead machines will show a lower cost.

The study showed that many loggers were harvesting their timber uneconomically. In fact, in many instances the total logging cost was greater than the value of the logs, and the result was a financial loss or negative realization.

It is not profitable to harvest small logs or trees with heavy machinery, but the crawler tractor offers possibilities for cheaper logging, these studies show. Science and engineering are again being called upon to adapt this new method to the needs of the industry and with improvements in methods and the adoption of selective logging, the forest industry on the Pacific Coast of North America will face an era of lower logging costs, simplified forest protection and regeneration and a more scientific forest management, Dr. Knapp concluded.

TRADE REPORTS MADE ON FISH

Market for Canadian Salmon in Irish Free State Is Discussed

Examination by the Canadian Trade Commissioner, at Dublin, into opportunities for Canadian canned salmon and other products for sale in the Irish Free State, led to the following information, compiled by the Provincial Bureau of Information from reports forwarded by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce.

"The amount of fish consumed in the Irish Free State is relatively small, in comparison with that of meats. Imports of canned fish are considerable, and are increasing. In 1932, they were valued at roughly $750,000, for some 5,000,000 pounds. Fresh salmon is caught plentifully in Ireland, but it is expensive and nearly all exported. It offers little competition to the canned variety.

EXTENT OF MARKET

"The Free State market is estimated to consume about 250,000 cases of canned salmon per annum, of which 150,000 cases are pinks, and the balance divided between reds and a smaller amount of medium reds. Other canned fish do not offer much competition as they do not offer the same value. Pinks sell to the poorer classes on account of price, and reds are limited to a few who are able to pay for quality and brand. Medium reds are not always procurable. The former prejudice against canned fish has died out.

"As far as is known, only one Canadian brand is in the market at present, although Canadian brands are well known and liked from former experience of them. They were usually supplied by large merchant houses, which apparently do not now specify the origin if their fish still comes from Canada. Stocks are mostly of Russian pinks and American reds, with some Japanese of all kinds.

"I'm selling pinks, brands are not so important as price, but in reds two brands have been well advertised and are consequently in a strong position in the market.

MARKETING METHODS

"Canned salmon has at no time been imported direct to any great extent, but has been handled largely through English houses. Stocks are mostly in the hands of professional storage firms, which charge a small weekly fee per tonnage, depending on quantities and other factors. While storage is an assistance to sales, it is possible for a commission agent having plenty of samples to introduce a good Canadian line to the wholesale trade on being kept posted with firm and competitive prices.

"No 1's, tall, both pink and red, are best sellers, followed by 1-2's, pink; No. 1's, flat, of good quality, and a few 1-2's, flat, of red and medium reds. There is no special packing or marking required, but a clear, attractive label helps sales. The usual quantities packed are eight dozen 1-2's, or four dozen 1's, to a case."

Canned salmon enters the Irish Free State free of duty.

BUYING SEASON

"The advent of Lent is the only factor which influences the buying or consumption period, deliveries made preceding that season. Pacific Coast direct sailings are irregular, but a cargo arriving after the Christmas trade would be more acceptable than at any other time. There should be ample time to secure a representative and furnish him with samples and prices, if the necessary action is taken."

ARRANGING TRIPS TO CHICAGO FAIR

Victoria Auto Club Supplies Information to Those Planning to Motor to Exhibition

Numerous applications for routes, mileage and general touring information to the World's Fair in Chicago, received at the Victoria Automobile Club during the past few days, indicates there are a large number of city residents expecting to visit the exhibition this Summer, according to R. R. Webb, club secretary.

The general desire is to incorporate a holiday trip with a visit to the fair, and for this purpose, information regarding routes, distances and stopping places, is required. Most favored of routes, at present, is the Lincoln Highway. However, there are other routes which present attractive features, and of which the club has full information.

"The Banff-Windermere Highway is now open, so motorists may remain in Canada as far as Winnipeg, taking in most of the scenic parts of the country, and, if so desired, take a return route through the United States," stated Mr. Webb. "It is also convenient in planning this trip to include Yellowstone National Park," he added.

Mr. Webb advises motorists, arranging such a trip, to communicate with the Victoria Automobile Club in the Crystal Garden, in order that they make definite plans as to time, places to be visited and the cost.

CALLED BY DEATH

After a lingering illness, there passed away at Jubilee Hospital, on Friday, Patricia May, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Leslie Brice, of Chilliwack. The remains were forwarded yesterday by Hayward's B.C. Funeral Company to Chilliwack for burial.

DRUGGISTS TO GATHER IN CITY

Annual Convention of Provincial Organization Is Set for June 29

The annual meeting of the British Columbia Pharmaceutical Association will be held in Victoria this year. The date set for this gathering of the druggists of the Province is Thursday, June 29. The convention will be held in the Chamber of Commerce. It is anticipated that there will be in attendance at the gathering at least seventy-five persons. The business session will open at 9 a.m.

General business affecting the association will come before the meeting, and the election of the officers for the coming year take place.

The officers this year are: President, A. Galloway, of Kamloops; secretary-treasurer, R. G. Stewart, of Vancouver. The councillors for the year for District No. 1 are: F. J. Boles and E. S. Knowlton; District No. 2, J. Fulton and J. Riddell; District No. 3, A. Galloway and J. F. Scott.

GOLF COMPETITION

In the afternoon, commencing at 1:30 o'clock, there will be a golf competition at the Uplands golf course. This is open to all druggists and drug travelers. The arrangements for this are in the hands of a committee consisting of Ivan Moore, Norman Wallace, Richard Jenkins and H. Aaronson.

The ladies of the party will be looked after during the afternoon, the arrangements including a drive to the gardens of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Butchart, followed by afternoon tea.

In the evening, a dance is being arranged in the Empress Hotel ballroom. This will begin at 9 o'clock and will include a dance supper. The committee in charge of this part of the proceedings is composed of Richard Jenkins, Miss P. Hudson, Miss D. Anderton, J. Riddell, J. Fulton and H. Young. In order to allow all druggists to attend the ball, the drug stores of the city will close at 9 o'clock on the evening of the convention.

WORKING BEE HELD AT SAANICH HIGH SCHOOL

Much progress was made on the tennis courts of the Mount View High School yesterday, when a large group of men, assisted by five horses, completed the third working "bee" under the auspices of the school. The work left to do is all of a fine nature and it is expected the courts will be ready by June 19.

H. Simpson, J. Ferrie, A. F. Morgan, J. Haynes, J. McCullough, B. Grainer, F. Merritt, F. W. Smith, Frank Smith, Jr., and R. C. Smith were the workers. All the men were volunteers.

Letters to the Editor

No letter to the Editor will be inserted except over the proper signature and address of the writer. This rule admits of no exception.

BATTLE OF FESTUBERT

Sir,—Upon reading my letter in this morning's Colonist, I find that I neglected to mention one most important fact, and that is, that the official name of the action of May 9, 1915, is the "Battle of Aubers Ridge."

The omission of this point made my former letter inconclusive, and I regret the oversight.

MEN WHO PLAY FAIR...

"Suppose I Forgot Your Salary for Several Months?"

The manager and I were having a little friendly talk about bills. Nothing serious, but I got the impression that he was checking up on me.

"What do you think of a fellow who lets his bills slide?" he said, ". . . who doesn't pay them until they're long past due?"

Thinking of myself, I replied:

"Well, the man may not be dishonest as far as I can see . . . he probably has other more pressing demands. "Besides," I blurted out, "his creditors aren't losing anything. They know they'll get their money some time!"

He was thoughtful a minute before answering.

"Not losing anything, eh? Bill, did you ever stop to think that the money you owe your creditors is food and clothes and rent? They have bills to pay, too. How would you get along if I forgot to pay your salary for several months?"

I admitted that I hadn't thought of it in that way.

"No, most men don't. Another thing they don't realize is that they hurt themselves when they fail to keep their credit good.

"It's this way: When you buy a suit of clothes on credit, you promise to pay within a certain time. The 'certain time' passes and the amount is still unpaid . . . creditors become skeptical, and your good name suffers. Then the time comes when you need credit badly . . . and you're out of luck!

"Another thing, Bill," he went on, "if you ever want to make real money in this world and keep it, you've got to have a good credit standing . . . lack of credit causes more failures than lack of brains!"

I admitted to him before I left that I would be doing myself a favor if I kept my credit good.

You owe it to yourself to pay your bills promptly. Start the habit and you'll have true peace of mind.

MOURN DEATH OF MRS. W. H. STARK

Mrs. Clara Gladys Stark, aged forty-two years, passed away yesterday at the Royal Jubilee Hospital. Mrs. Stark lived at 1224 Caledonia Avenue. She was born in England and had been a resident of Victoria for the past thirteen years.

She is survived by her husband, William Henry Stark; one daughter, Alice E.; one son, Thomas J., all at the family residence, and a brother in Alberta and a sister in England.

The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon at the McCall Bros.' Funeral Home at 2 o'clock. Rev. A. deB. Owen will officiate and interment will be made in Royal Oak Burial Park.

SEATTLE, June 3 (AP).—Attorney Aston S. Peake was given a suspended sentence of five to ten years in the state penitentiary today on two check forgery counts by Superior Judge Roscoe R. Smith, despite the vigorous protest of deputy Prosecutor Emmett G. Lenihan.

City and District

No Council Meeting—There will be no council meeting Monday night, the Summer schedule having gone into effect. The next meeting will be held on June 12, and every second Monday thereafter.

Band Parades — The Kitsilano Junior Band, which won such distinction in the musical festivals held here and in Vancouver, paraded through the downtown area of Victoria yesterday, giving impromptu concerts at various points.

Gun Practice—Gun practice will be carried out from the Esquimalt defences between the hours of 10:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday. The range will be 10,000 yards, and the arc of fire William Head and Trial Island.

Overseas Club—The June meeting of the Overseas Club will be held on Monday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, in the private dining-room of David Spencer, Limited. M. Pursur will be the speaker and will give an address on Australia.

Shawnigan Liberals—T. D. Pattullo, Major S. F. M. Moodie, John Hart and C. E. Whitney-Griffiths will address a public meeting of the Shawnigan Lake Liberal Association, at Shawnigan Lake Hall, on Friday night at 8 o'clock.

Saanich Building—Five permits, with a total value of $2,105, were issued at Royal Oak Municipal Hall last week. One new dwelling will be erected in the municipality, a six-room frame house, valued at $1,500. The remainder were for additions to property.

Conservatives Meet—The executive of the Victoria Conservative Association will meet on Wednesday evening for the transaction of business, after which the meeting will be addressed by D. B. Plunkett, M.P., on the legislation passed at Ottawa. The gathering will be confined to members of the executive.

Annual Meeting — The Victoria Ministerial Association will hold its regular annual meeting on Monday, at 10 o'clock in the morning, at the Y.M.C.A. Rev. Albert Schormann, minister of the German Lutheran Church, will be the principal speaker. Officers will be elected for the ensuing year.

To Hold Meetings—Saanich Ward Two Non-Political Ratepayers' Association will meet on Wednesday, at 7:30 o'clock, at Tolmie School. Important matters are on the agenda and it has been suggested that meetings be suspended for July and August. All members are requested to attend.

Rotarian Here—W. D. Darker, of Queensland, was a visitor at the Dominion Hotel yesterday, but left last night, en route to Boston, to attend the International Rotary Convention and the 200th anniversary of Free Masonry. While here, Mr. Darker was entertained by Stephen Jones and Herbert Pendray.

Will Discuss Roses—H. M. Eddie, of the British Columbia Coast Nurseries, at Sardis, will be the speaker at the monthly meeting of the Victoria Horticultural Society on Tuesday, in the City Hall. Mr. Eddie has chosen "Roses" as his topic, and an invitation to the general public to attend has been given by the executive. The meeting will commence at 8 o'clock.

Results Announced—Robert Pettigrew, of Corbin, first class, and Robert Shaw, Corbin, and James Biggs, Wellington, third class, were successful candidates in Provincial examinations held for coal mine officials recently, it was announced yesterday by the Department of Mines. The examinations were held at Fernie, Princeton, Nanaimo and Cumberland by the board of examiners for the Province.

Those taking part were: Walter Gaskill, B. Brown, Victor Wheatley, "Billie" Smith, Samuel Howard, Jack Grimston, George Gardiner, Reginald Hayward, Frank Grimston, Ernest Kirtman, and many others.

Pay Visit to Aged Men—Fred Landsberg was accompanied by W. J. McArthur on his recent visit to the Aged Men's Home, and made the usual gift of $2 to non-pensioners, also distributing cigars from G. A. Merrick. A new locality will be chosen this year for a change for the annual picnic. This popular outing, arranged by Mr. Landsberg, has for several years been held at the Summer home of Major M. Kirkpatrick-Crocket, who left little to be desired in the way of comfort and convenience for the party.

Shows Fine Artistry in Programme

H. B. TURPIN

A few intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Turpin spent a very enjoyable morning at their charming home, "Villa di Grazia," Rockland Avenue, recently, on the occasion of a joint recital given by Mr. Turpin and his accompanist, Mr. Edgar Holloway.

The former, who has just returned from a long visit in Europe, although latterly best remembered in the musical world as the friend and accompanist of the late Mr. Cecil Fanning, the distinguished American baritone, in an earlier day enjoyed considerable fame as a singer himself. This gift he recently rediscovered, and in the three groups he contributed to his programme he revealed the characteristics of a fine art, with easy and unforced production of tone, beautiful style, and diction which feelingly conveyed the sound and significance of every syllable.

CLARITY OF WORDS

Singing in Italian, German and English, he had the same refined clarity of words throughout. In point of pure settlement one of his English ballads, sung by him fifty years ago at the wedding of a friend, and more recently at her golden wedding, was of particular interest to the listeners, who were most spontaneous in the applause.

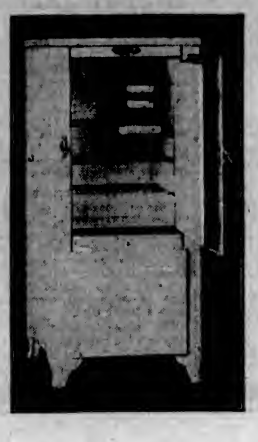

Mr. Holloway accompanied with sensitive skill, and in his two piano solo groups displayed fine musicianship, both in respect of execution and interpretation.

THE PROGRAMME

Mr. Turpin's numbers were, in Italian: "O Cessate di Piagarmi" and "Spesso Vibra per Suogioco" (Scarlatti), and "Come Raggio di Sol" (Caldara); in German, "Am Meer" (Schubert) and "Ode Saffica" (Brahms); and in English, "All Souls' Day" (Lassen), "An Old Garden" (Hope Temple), "Some Day" (Milton Wellings), "My Lady's Bower" (Temple). Mr. Holloway's were "Pastorale," and "Sonata in C Major," by Scarlatti; "Chorale" (Bach), and two Chopin numbers, "Nocturne in F Sharp Major," and "Scherzo in B Flat Major."

Those present were the Comte and Comtesse Jean de Suzannet, Prince Andre Chirinsky Chihmatoff and his bride, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. D. Guthrie, Dr. and Mrs. T. A. Rickard, Mrs. Barrington, Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Heisterman, Mrs. Crowe Baker, Miss Ross, and Mr. E. W. Curtis, of New York, who has been a guest of "Villa di Grazia" during the week.

BOYS' BAND IS MUCH ENJOYED

Splendid Programme Given by Kitsilano Organization —Versatility Shown

An enjoyable concert was given by the Kitsilano Junior Band, which won distinction in the Victoria and Vancouver Musical Festivals, in the City Temple last night. The band is giving a series of concerts here to raise funds to defray expenses of its proposed trip to the Chicago Century of Progress Fair, where the organization will compete with others from all parts of the world.

The band opened the concert with Sousa's famous "King Cotton March." The versatility and proficiency of these young instrumentalists were demonstrated in the selections they chose for the programme.

Overtures, selections from grand opera, light opera, musical comedies, marches and popular melodies comprised the programme.

SOLO OFFERINGS

A delightful cornet solo "My Old Kentucky Home" was rendered by Roy Johnson, while Milton Bryson gave a saxophone solo.

"The Rosary" was played as a trumpet quartette by Roy Johnson, G. Delamont, D. Endacott, and A. Delamont, while Adolph Berglint played "Our Director" as an accordion solo number.

The band will give a concert in the Royal Athletic Park, at 3 o'clock, this afternoon; another at 7 p.m. in the City Temple, and again at 9 p.m., also in the City Temple.

PILES
Ended Without Cutting or Salves
If you think a surgical operation is the only way to get rid of itching, bleeding or protruding Piles, it's because you haven't heard of the harmless internal medicine discovered by a prominent Western physician.
After years of study, Dr. J. S. Leonhardt found the cause of Piles to be internal—congestion of blood in the lower bowel—the hemorrhoidal veins flabby; the bowel walls weak; the parts almost dead. Right away the doctor set to work to find a real internal remedy. He succeeded, and after prescribing it for 1,000 patients, with success in over 900 cases, he named his prescription HEM-ROID.
The doctor wants every Pile sufferer to benefit by his discovery, and so there will be no doubting or delay MacFarlane and Vancouver Drug Stores and druggists everywhere are authorized to sell HEM-ROID with guarantee of money back if it does not end Piles in any form.
So why waste time on external treatments or think of an operation when HEM-ROID tablets are guaranteed. (Advt.)

FRANK SHIELDS HEADS FOR HOME

PARIS, June 3 (AP).—Frank X. Shields, fifth ranking United States tennis player, who was expected to compete in the English championships at Wimbledon, is en route home, the French Tennis Federation revealed today.

Shields, dressed in evening clothes and minus his luggage, sailed unexpectedly on the President Harding Thursday, after an all-night party following his defeat in the French championships by Christian Boussus, on Wednesday.

He went to the boat train to see friends off and suddenly decided to go along, wiring friends in Paris from the port to forward his luggage.

King's Weather Adds Brilliance To Garden Party

Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Fordham Johnson Entertain at Government House in Honor of His Majesty's Birthday—Distinguished Scientists Mingle With Throng

MATCHLESS Summer weather favored the annual garden party, held yesterday at Government House, in celebration of the King's birthday. The beautiful grounds with their curving expanses of greensward, their flower-filled borders, fine shrubberies and magnificent trees made a lovely setting for the gay frocks of the ladies and the smart naval and military uniforms of the men as the guests dispersed about the grounds after presentation to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Fordham Johnson, the latter becomingly dressed in an orange and green flowered black ninon with black velvet coat and picture hat of Milan straw.

Approximately 1,500 invitations were sent out, and an unusually cosmopolitan air was lent to the scene by the presence of numerous delegates to the Pacific Science Congress that has been in session here for the past three days, among their number being a party of Japanese, with one or two ladies in picturesque native dress. The church, the state, the judiciary, the army and navy, the diplomatic corps, and civic and other bodies from the Island and Mainland were all represented. A. M. D. Fairbairn and Capt. J. G. Cromack announced the guests, and the aides were Lieut.-Commander A. C. Wurtele, R.C.N.; Lieut. J. F. A. Lister, of Work Point Barracks; Major Selden Humphreys, D.S.O., and Capt. Hobart Molson, M.C.

Tea was served in the big marquee, erected on the lower lawn, the tables were decorated with huge bowls of pink antirrhinum and gladioli, and throughout the afternoon the regimental band of the 16th Canadian Scottish played, by kind permission of Lieut.-Col. Brooke Stephenson, their scarlet tunics and tartans lending a further gay splash of color.

The invited guests were as follows:

The regular meeting of the Robert Burns McMicking Chapter, I.O.D.E., will be held in the municipal rooms, Union Building, on Tuesday evening, June 6, at 8 o'clock sharp. As this is the last meeting before the holidays, a full attendance is requested, in order that all business may be completed.

Dr. O. M. Jones Chapter

The monthly meeting of the Dr. O. M. Jones Chapter, I.O.D.E., will be held at the home of Mrs. Fred Spencer, 685 Beach Drive, Oak Bay, on Saturday afternoon, at 2:30 p.m. As this is the last meeting before the Summer vacation, a good attendance is requested.

Harvey-Boggs Chapter

The Valentine Harvey-Beaumont Boggs Chapter, I.O.D.E., will meet at headquarters on Tuesday at 2:30 p.m.

Florence Nightingale Chapter

The monthly meeting of Florence Nightingale Chapter will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at headquarters. As this will be the last meeting before the holidays, all members are urgently requested to attend.

Gonzales Chapter

Gonzales Chapter, I.O.D.E., will hold the last meeting of the season on Tuesday, June 6, at 10:30 a.m., at headquarters.

Ganges Chapter

The monthly meeting of the Ganges Chapter took place Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Charles Mackintosh, Ganges Harbor. The regent, Mrs. W. E. Scott presided. The treasurer's report, read by Mrs. Frank Crofton, showed that after donations were given and expenses paid, there was only a small balance left. Arrangements were made for a tennis tournament and garden party, for which Mr. and Mrs. Desmond Crofton are kindly lending their grounds on Saturday, June 24. There will be clock golf and other attractive side shows during the afternoon, for which prizes will be awarded to the winners. Ice cream and soft drinks will also be on sale. The regent reported that this was the last of the I.O.D.E. meetings until after the Summer, when they will be resumed in September.

Clubs and Societies

Fairfield W.A.

The regular meeting of the W.A. of Fairfield United Church was held on Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. Thorpe, Cornwall Street. The president, Mrs. Piercy, presided. The meeting opened with prayer and Scripture reading. A gratifying report was received from the special committee on the sale of recipe books. Mesdames Jackson and Green will look after flowers for the church for June. As June 4 is "Flower Sunday" at Fairfield Church, the president asked the members to assist the flower committee by supplying flowers and helping to arrange same. The regular July meeting will be held in the Japanese Gardens at the Gorge, when Mrs. Hocking will be the hostess. It was decided to dispense with the regular meeting in August. A picnic will be held at the Summer home of Mrs. A. Schroeder, Prospect Lake, some time in August. The next sewing meeting of the society will be held on Thursday, June 22, at the home of Mrs. McCaw, 146 Howe Street.

Charity Recital Set for June 16

The Jubilee Hospital Children's Ward will benefit by a dance recital by the Violet Fowkes Studio of Dancing, under the sponsorship of the Daughters of Pity. The recital, which will be held at the Shrine Auditorium on Friday, June 16, will be one of the brightest shows of the season and is under the distinguished patronage of Mayor and Mrs. David Leeming, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Shandley and other public-spirited Victorians. Mr. Shandley is chairman of directors of the Jubilee Hospital.

The programme, which is diversified and exceptionally well-balanced, includes all types of dancing and will appeal to all. A special feature will be "School Days," in which the tinier pupils will appear, and is certain to be an outstanding hit of this happy show.

Happy Couple Mark Wedding Anniversary

Many friends of Mr. and Mrs. T. Lindsay Ray, former residents here, will be interested to know they celebrated their golden wedding yesterday at the home of their daughter, Mrs. James McNeil, Eighth Avenue, West Vancouver.

It is over forty years since Mr. and Mrs. Ray came from the Eastern States to settle on Vancouver Island, the last twenty years being spend in Victoria. They but recently moved to Vancouver.

Their six children were with them yesterday. They were Richard R. (Dick), of Union Bay; A. L. (Fred), of Seattle; Mrs. James McNeil, of Vancouver; Mrs. Lancelot Hall, and Forrest and Frank Ray, of Victoria. There are eighteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray are Nova Scotians, the former from New Glasgow, and the bride of fifty years ago, from Pictou. They are both enjoying good health. Mr. Ray is in his seventy-seventh year, and Mrs. Ray was seventy - three on June 1.

Columbia W.A. to Hold Excursion To Mayne Island

Columbia Women's Auxiliary Diocesan Board meeting will be held on Mayne Island on Wednesday, June 14. Transportation has been arranged for members who will leave by bus at 9 a.m. from the Vancouver Island Coach Lines depot, 629 Broughton Street, to Swartz Bay, to take the Cy Peck ferry at 10 a.m.

As this is a public excursion, members are advised to purchase their tickets this week, as the ferry can only carry 125 passengers, and it is advisable that those members who are motoring to Swartz Bay, should buy their ferry tickets in Victoria, as the number is so limited. Out-of-town members can have their tickets secured by request, to Mrs. J. R. Hartley, 837 Burdett Avenue, diocesan treasurer, who will supply further information.

Members are asked to mention, when buying tickets, that they are women's auxiliary members, but the excursion is open to the general public, and not exclusively for the women's auxiliary. The bus will leave punctually at 9 a.m.

OAKLANDS P.-T.A.

The Oaklands Parent-Teacher Association will hold a 500 card party in the school auditorium on Friday at 8:30 o'clock. As this will be the last game of this season, a large attendance is expected. Rowles' Boys' Band will give a concert from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock.

Weddings

WILLIAMS—JACKSON

A quiet wedding was solemnized recently at the home of Rev. David Walker, 1133 Rockland Avenue, when Miss Ruby Desima Jackson was united in marriage to Mr. Ronald Frank Williams. The bride was given away by her mother, Mrs. E. Jackson, and was attended by Miss May Rose Buckingham. The groom was supported by Mr. Alexander Duncan.

Prince Wilhelm Loses Title Through Marriage

Brilliant Wedding in Germany Breaks Rigid "House Law" Which Has Been in Effect Since the Fifteenth Century

BONN, Germany, June 3 (AP).—Handsome Prince Wilhelm, eldest son of the former Crown Prince, married below his royal station today, and thereby lost his claim to the German throne.

Disobeying a rigid "house law" of the Hohenzollerns, which has been in effect since the fifteenth century, the prince, who will be twenty-seven, on July 4, took as his bride, Dorothea von Salvati, a vivacious young woman of twenty-five.

The marriage placed Louis Ferdinand Hohenzollern, a youthful globe trotter, who has worked in the Ford automobile plant at Dearborn, Mich., in line for succession to the chieftainey of the family. Louis Ferdinand is the brother of Wilhelm.

SIGNIFY CHANGE

Should the Hohenzollern dynasty be restored to the throne, Louis Ferdinand, and not Wilhelm, would be the monarch. Immediately after the colorful marriage ceremonies here, the Hohenzollern administration signified the change by publishing the following communique:

"Prince Wilhelm of Prussia on reaching his majority renounced all rights derived from primogeniture in the event of his entering upon a marriage that runs counter to the house law of the royal family. This eventually became a reality by his marriage to Dorothea von Salviati."

Louis Ferdinand, who is greatly devoted to his grandfather, the former Kaiser, will have the huge task of managing the Hohenzollern fortune and estates, scattered all over Germany and Holland, and will have to look to the material welfare of the entire family.

DYNASTY REPRESENTED

There was both a civil and a church ceremony today for Wilhelm and his bride. Guests attending the church ceremony were pleasantly surprised when Hubertus, the third son of the former Crown Prince, turned up to represent the dynasty. The Hohenzollern administration had intimated previously that no member of the family would attend.

The former Kaiser relented, however, after representations had been made to him by advisers, and permitted Hubertus to be present. Louis Ferdinand, to whom seniority descended, was requested to stay away.

The bridegroom wore the uniform of the Steel Helmet War Veterans organization, and the bride was clad in an ordinary white wedding dress.

FORM HONOR GUARD

Uniformed Steel Helmet comrades of the bridegroom formed an honor guard beside the altar and before the church, where a huge cheering throng assembled. Wilhelm—his full name is Wilhelm Friedrich Franz Josef Tlafis—is a battalion leader of the Steel Helmet organization.

The bride's forebears were commoners from Northern Italy. Declining to become Roman Catholics, they moved to Prussia during the reign of Frederick the Great. They acquired German citizenship and in 1830 received the patent of nobility.

Dorothea's father, Alexander von Salviati, followed the military life and became marshal of the court of Prince Adolf of Schaumburg-Lippe. He died in 1922. Her mother is of an old family of Hamburg merchant princes.

Show Enjoyed on Saltspring Island

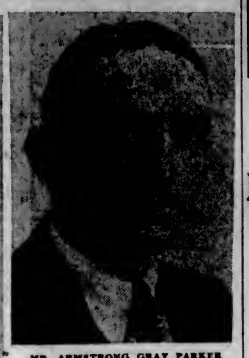

SALTSPRING ISLAND, June 3.—The Capital Entertainers, under the management of Chris Kenny, gave a most attractive variety show at the Mahon Hall, Ganges, last Thursday evening. About eighty were present and the large number of children in the audience heartily enjoyed the old English Punch and Judy show, ventriloquism and conjuring.

Keep on plugging. Remember the first ollve you succeed in fishing out of a bottle lossens up the others.

Announcement of Engagement Made

MISS LOUISE MUNSIE WILKERSON

MR. ARMSTRONG GRAY PARKER

MRS. L. B. Wilkerson, 1392 Rockland Avenue, announces the engagement of her youngest daughter, Louise Munsie, to Mr. Armstrong Gray Parker, of Vancouver, who is a member of the firm of Miller, Court & Co. Miss Wilkerson is the granddaughter of the late Mr. William McGillvray Munsie, one of Victoria's outstanding pioneer citizens. She is a former pupil of Havergal College at Toronto and is a sister of Mrs. Hugh McClaren, who resides in Windsor, Ont. Mr. Parker is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong Parker, of Seaforth, Ont. The marriage will take place this Summer.

Social and Personal Notes

Cup and Saucer Shower

Mrs. Jack Murrant, 412 Kerr Avenue, entertained recently at a cup and saucer shower in honor of Miss Nettie Reece, a June bride-elect. The rooms were decorated with flowers, while the shower basket was decorated in shades of pink and white. The hostess was assisted by Mrs. F. W. McKinnon and Mrs. A. Stevens, who presided at the daintily-appointed table, centred with a miniature bride's cake. Mrs. R. VanSickle and Mrs. W. Ingram assisted in serving. The invited guests included: Rev. and Mrs. F. W. McKinnon, Mr. and Mrs. S. Gulliford, Mr. and Mrs. A. Stevens, Mesdames P. McKague, P. Woolcocks, Gage, H. Nancarrow, B. Smith, W. Tyson, T. Ralph, P. Mackereth, Beale, W. Ingram, R. Van-Sickle, James, D. Willoughby, W. Moore, Misses Turner, Lillian Tyson, Eveline Smith, Vera Hawkins, Mildred and Gertrude Beale, D. Reece, Messrs. Thomas Cooper, J. Murrant, and Master Glenn Murrant.

Linen Shower

Miss Nettie Reece, a popular bride-elect, was the recipient of a linen shower, given by Mrs. J. Murkar and her daughter, Florence, at their home on Dupplin Road. The many beautiful gifts were concealed in a minature canoe, decorated in the prevailing colors, yellow and white. A buffet supper was served from a table, centred by a bride's cake and a bowl of lilies-of-the-valley. The guests participated in a number of games and contests. The invited guests included: Mesdames James, Cooper and Murkar; Misses Nettie Reece, Gertrude and Mildred Beale, Clotilda Casilio, Mary Crowe, Betty Barlow, May Pendray, Hazel and Laura Seed, Mary Heatley, Laura and Marion Woodward and Florence Murkar.

Shower Held

A shower in honor of Miss Rusha Macdonald, a bride-elect, was held at the home of Miss Evelyn Macdonald, 1320 Balmoral Road, yesterday afternoon. Miss Flora Macdonald, wearing pirate costume, sang an appropriate pirate song before bringing in a ship laden with the gifts for the bride-elect. The tea table had dainty appointments carried out in a yellow and mauve motif. Tea was poured by Mrs. H. A. Howell, grandmother of the bride-elect, assisted by Mrs. H. Lamont, Miss Evelyn Macdonald, and Mrs. Fox. Others present were Mrs. Hugh Macdonald, Mrs. B. Smith, Mrs. P. Wilson, Mrs. Jean Macdonald, Mrs. J. H. Russell, Mrs. E. Harris, Miss B. Wheldon, and Miss Helen Bolt.

Popular Girl Wed Quietly At St. Mary's

The wedding of Louise Elaine, elder daughter of Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. Gailliher and Mrs. Gailliher, St. Charles Street, and Mr. Edward Charles Williamson, son of Captain and Mrs. C. Williamson, of Savannah Avenue, Saanich, was quietly solemnized in St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay, yesterday afternoon, Rev. Canon Nunns officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. Hugh Peters, looked very smart in her traveling suit of grey, with grey fox trimming, with which she wore a red hat, red shoes, and a corsage of red roses. She was attended by Miss Wilma Henderson, in green, with matching accessories, and a corsage of pink carnations. Mr. Gordon Brabazone supported the groom.

After their honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Williamson will make their home at the corner of Cadboro Bay Road and Dalhousie Street.

Y.W.C.A. Notes

A membership drive for the Victoria branch of the Young Women's Christian Association will be opened tomorrow, and will continue all week. For the convenience of new members and for such of the present members whose fees are now due, there will be a representative of the membership committee on duty at David Spencer's, Ltd., all week, to whom dues may be paid.

Under the convenership of Miss Norma Macdonald, the annual membership tea will be held on Wednesday afternoon, from 3 to 6 o'clock, in the association building, Courtney Street, to which present and prospective members are invited.

As the association is largely dependent upon public support for funds to carry on its work among women and girls, it is hoped that a greatly increased membership will result from the week's intensive campaign.

Dream at Last Comes True to Stenographer

MONTREAL, June 3 (CP).—Cheerful optimism and calm confidence was the spirit noticeable among members of the Canadian delegation, sailing on the liner Duchess of Bedford for the World Economic Conference in London. But the happiest and most enthusiastic member of the party was a brunette wisp of a girl, Muriel Black, one of the most comely and efficient typists on the staff of the Prime Minister's office in Ottawa.

To Miss Black the journey was a dream come true. She is the only non-technical member of the party, and will personally supervise the handling of Premier Bennett's correspondence while abroad.

Women's Institutes

SHAWNIGAN LAKE

The monthly meeting of the Shawnigan Lake Women's Institute was held recently in the S.L.A.A. Hall. Mrs. F. Gannon, the president, was in the chair. Several items of correspondence were read and attended to. Mrs. A. Dyson advised the meeting of the receipt of new books for the library from Victoria. Mrs. M. Kinloch gave an interesting report of the Librarian Conference in Victoria. School children competing for prizes donated by the institute for Empire geography and spelling, will be examined by Mr. A. Plows and Miss E. V. Archer. It was decided to donate $3 toward ice cream for the school picnic. Arrangements were made for the pemanent care of the float. Miss M. Gildea, of Strathcona Lodge School, addressed the meeting. She touched on Empire building, international building, the work of the League of Nations and the possibilities of a national government. Tea was served by Mrs. N. Alexander, Mrs. W. Broocke and Mrs. C. Page.

St. John's

Clover Point proved a very enjoyable place for the first beach party held this season by St. John's A.Y.P.A. Songs and recitations were enjoyed. St. Alban's flannel dance, to be held on June 7, was announced.

Crowley: "I would rather be good than great."

Blunt: "Well, it's easier. There isn't so much competition!"

Anglican Young People

St. Luke's

An inspiring evening was spent recently, when Dean Quainton and a group of young people addressed St. Luke's A.Y.P., and others of St. Luke's parish on "The Oxford Group Movement." On Tuesday evening there will be a very important business meeting, with the election of officers as the outstanding feature.

Saltspring

The regular meeting of the Saltspring A.Y.P.A. was held recently at the vicarage. The president, Mrs. W. Rogers, was in the chair. There was a short business discussion and the retiring officers gave a report of their work since the inauguration of the Saltspring branch. Officers for the opening year were elected as follows: President, Mrs. W. Rogers; vice-president, Miss Margaret Purdy; secretary, Basil Shaw; treasurer, Harry Newman; convener of social committee, Mrs. Alan Cartwright; convener of missionary society, Miss Maud Cunningham; convener of visiting committee, Miss O. Cunningham, and educational secretary, Mrs. D. Hamilton. These officers will not take over their duties until after the Summer vacation. There will be another meeting at the vicarage on Wednesday. The evening was concluded with community singing, with Miss Margaret Purdy at the piano. The supper hostess was Mrs. D. Hamilton.

Cathedral

At a recent meeting of the executive of the Cathedral A.Y.P.A., a programme was arranged for Sunday, June 11, in the form of a basket picnic at Willows Beach Park, at 2:30 p.m. A programme of sports is being arranged, and all members are welcome.

Leadership Rally

All members of the A.Y.P.A. are looking forward to the leadership rally, which will take place at the Memorial Hall on June 10, at 8 o'clock. On this occasion, Mr. J. Walker, president of the Provincial Council of the A.Y.P.A., will be present. The main object of his visit at this time is to meet officers and on matters pertaining to the organization. Another feature of the evening will be a reunion of camp enthusiasts. All young people interested in either Camp Arteban or the A.Y.P.A. Camp are urged to be present to hear the latest details in this connection. A social programme for the evening is being arranged by Mr J. Aylwin and Mr E. Slater. Every A.Y.P.A. member is urged to be present to insure the success of the evening.

CUT WASTE AND SAVE THE MODERN WAY

SHIFTS SCENE OF GOLD HUNT

Old Map and Letter Change Location in Mexican Gulf

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 3 (UP).—The century-old quest for buried pirate gold around the mouth of the Mississippi River will shift to Cat Island, just off the Louisiana coast in the Gulf of Mexico, as the result of recent discoveries by two engineers.

Search for the pirate booty of the early part of the nineteenth century previously had centred about Grand Isle, fifteen miles to the east of Bayou LaFourche. Cat Island, which is not indicated on any modern map, is fifteen miles to the west of the bayou.

New light was shed on the pirates when Frank C. Waddill, New Orleans engineer and member of the Louisiana Historical Society, found an old map while doing some research work in a New Iberia lawsuit. The map indicated Cat Island is the "position of the pirates." On it face also was written, near Grand Isle, "the former position of the pirates."

Waddill's discovery was substantiated by another made by Walter Y. Kemper, Franklin, La., engineer, who worked with Waddill on the New Iberia case. Kemper, while in the U.S. Land Office in Washington, discovered a letter, dated March 17, 1814, written to a Louisiana landowner by an employe of the Land Office.

HAD LARGE FLEET

It read in part:

"I had contemplated the immediate survey of valuable public lands and islands of the west coast from the Mississippi, but unsafe because of an overgrown piratical banditi. They have fortified themselves on one of the islands and suffer none to approach them.

"The party of pirates amount to upwards of 500 men. They are fortified on Cat Island and have five or six armed vessels carrying twelve or fourteen guns and sixty to ninety men each."

SLUM EXTINCTION BEING ATTEMPTED

Greatest Clearing Scheme in Century to Be Led by British Government

LONDON, June 3 (CP). — The British Government visualizes the clearing of all slum areas in the United Kingdom by 1938 at the latest, according to an official statement from Whitehall. The slogan is: "Sweep away the slums, give proper housing to the displaced people, make it easy for them to live in decent homes—and do it quickly."

This declaration or ultimatum is regarded as being the beginning of the biggest war on slums undertaken for 100 years. The whole forces of the Government are to be thrust into the campaign. Local authorities are to be bombarded by the Ministry of Health until they produce schemes. These will be passed by the authorities with the utmost speed and work should begin on many of the schemes within a very short time.

In the view of the Government, the present rate at which the slums are being dealt with is too slow and they look for a concerted effort between the central government and the local authorities immediately concerted to insure a speedier end to the evil, and an end within a limited time.

"PIGEON ENGLISH"

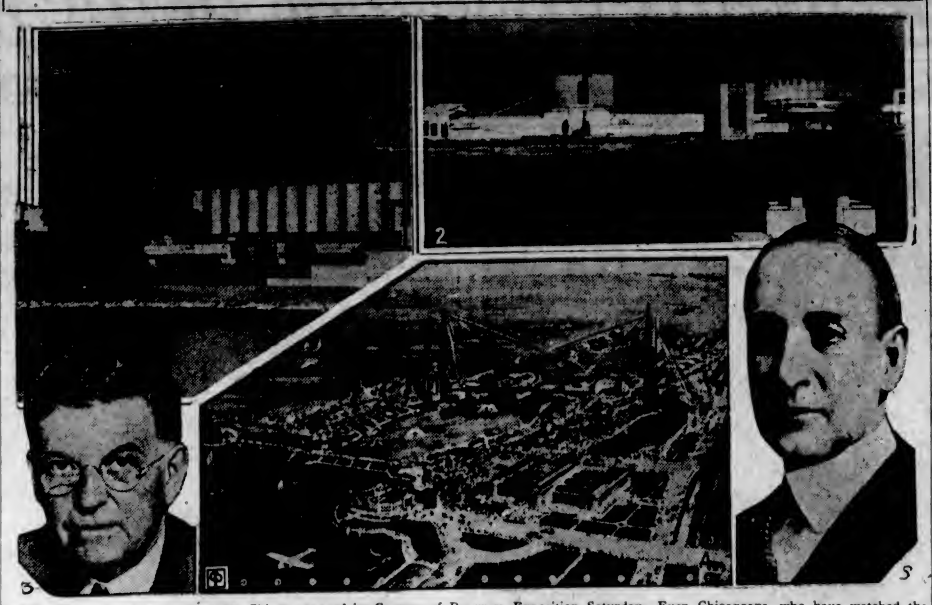

A reader inquires as to the origin of the expression "pigeon English" to describe the combinations of English words arranged after Chinese syntax that is a common method of communication in commercial centres of China between the Chinese and foreigners. "What," he asks, "has the pigeon to do with it?"

The pigeon has nothing to do with it. The more common form is "pidgin English." And it is understood that "pidgin," or "pigeon," is a Chinese corruption of "business," used indefinitely.

Foreigners living in China soon become accustomed to having their native servants use the word "pidgin" to replace English nouns which they do not know. Hence, a phonograph is a "sing-song pidgin"; a debate, a talking "pidgin"; a radiator, a "flee (fire) pidgin."

Century of Progress Exposition Opens

WITH great pomp and ceremony, Chicago opened its Century of Progress Exposition Saturday. Even Chicagoans, who have watched the buildings being constructed, are still a bit dazzled and bewildered by the strange beauty of the modernistic architecture. CHAPTER XII

On Tarling Moor the gorse was still in bloom, though the full glory of gold had deserted it for the waving branches of the broom. Great white clouds sailed over Beacon Hill, and the slanting sunlight smoothed the slopes of the moor, burnishing them into sleek color masses of green, purple, and bronze. Tarling Moor was a rare galloping ground for a man whose blood had been overheated. Beacon Hill lifted a calm and unfretful forehead against the sky, and the shadows of winddriven clouds raced with the sunlight over the hills.

John Wolfe came riding back from the direction of Herongate, where he had been called to see a shepherd who was ill. The climb out of that rotten, worm-eaten old town towards the wide spaciousness of the moor had cleared Wolfe's brain and steadied his heart. Only a few hours had passed since Jasper Turrell had tried to bully him in Virgin's Court, and that one incident seemed likely to make of Navestock a battleground or a tilting-yard.

Wolfe had felt a desire to be alone, to thrash things out in his own mind, to climb up above the little dust storms of the moment and gain a broad view of his own horizon. The ride over Tarling Moor had given him the calmness of outlook that he needed. Wolfe knew that he had been warned off that morning, and that Jasper Turrell had thrown a stick at a dog that had shown an inclination to trespass under his garden gate. And Jasper Turrell's attitude was likely to be the attitude of Navestock. The incident of that absurb quarrel had opened Wolfe's eyes. The little people would not only twist their mouths at him and gibber maliciously; they would gather like apes and try to pelt him out of the town. Turrell had bellowed a warning. The people who owned Navestock would tolerate no man who attempted to tell them unpleasant truths.

Now Wolfe was a born fighter, one of those men whose chin and fists go up even in the face of a crowd. He had glimpses of what might happen in Navestock, the anger and malice he might arouse, the abuse he would receive, the influence that would be exerted against him. It takes a man of great courage to stamp the faces of his fellows with the seal of hate. Few of us find pleasure in offending those who dwell about us. Our amiability is apt to make us cowards. But Wolfe had that touch of fanaticism that compels a man to utter what he knows to be the truth.

Across the sterner gloom of his thoughts rose the sun-splashed spires of the Moor Farm cypresses. Wolfe saw the red house with its holly hedges spreading along the ridge below him as he descended the moor. An impulse stirred in him, bidding him turn aside towards Moor Farm. More than once since his first visit he had passed across the paddock and up the stone-paved path. These people of the moor did him good when he was lonely. There was a charm about the old house, and Wolfe had seen the orchard in bloom, and the daffodils nodding their heads over the rich green grass. The comely, smiling goodwill of the mother contrasted with the wind-blown hair and sparkling frankness of wild-eyed Jess. These were people who filled the heart when it felt empty, and made a man's sad thoughts grow mischievous and young.

As Wolfe neared the white gate he saw a short, brown-smocked figure come running across the paddock. The figure waved an arm and shouted. It was Bob, the Carter's boy, who had bumped in and out of Navestock on the back of the brown pony.

"Mr. Wolfe, sir, you be wanted."

He ran up and opened the white gate.

"I was just a-coming for you, sir." Wolfe rode in.

"Somebody ill, Bob?"

"The missus, sir. That there thasthma."

"I take your word for it, Bob. You are an excellent diagnostician."

The boy grinned.

"Thank yer, sir. I be'unt much of a chap at words."

Bob ran at Wolfe's side, and took his horse when he dismounted at the end of the holly hedge. The geese had followed them, gaggling in line, with the old one-eyed gander at their head. They made a cheerful noise; and the humming of the wind in the cypresses was like the humming of some great happy spirit watching the sunlight race over the grass.

Wolfe had reached the porch, when a black cat came whisking out, followed by a flying figure with a round basket set helmet-wise upon its head. The flying figure saved itself within six inches of Wolfe's waistcoat, and fell back with a flush of color and a glimmer of mischievous confusion.

"Oh—Mr. Wolfe!"

The black cat had fled terror-stricken into the summerhouse. Wolfe's eyes were full of laughter.

"Is this the latest fashion in bonnets?"

Jess tossed the thing off into a corner of the porch.

"Don't be silly. I was only frightening old Thomas. It's the egg basket."

"Oh, the egg basket?"

"Yes."

"I see."

She looked at him with a moment's gravity and then fell into a glorious laughter, the free, bubbling laughter of a healthy child. The sound thrilled through Wolfe like the joy of a perfect morning. He laughed, too, quiet, deep-chested laughter that sang second to her ringing treble.

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Oh, you are silly."

"Why, indeed?"

"What is there to laugh at?"

"Ask Thomas and the basket, and——"

"And what?"

"Me."

"You?"

"And yourself."

She shook her hair, as though shaking her laughter off like spray. Her eyes became serious.

"You are nice doctor, to stand laughing here——"

"Oh, come, now. It was lucky that Bob caught me. I've been up Herongate way. Your mother—is it——"

"Yes."

"I'll go up at once."

"Please do. It's Flemyng's Cross tonight. Mother won't be able to go. She says I must."

"What is Flemyng's Cross? An out-of-door service for bad-tempered people? If so, your mother certainly needn't be there. I forbid it."

"What nonsense you talk!"

She was climbing the old oak stairs, and turning back to look at him. A stream of sunlight from a window splashed the panelling behind her, so that Wolfe saw her hair black against a background of glimmering light.

"It's one of the Manor Courts, and the steward of the Lord of the Manor has held it for hundreds and hundreds of years. All the tenants have to take their dues, and no one must speak above a whisper."

"And Mrs. Mascall is going to send—you?"

"I can whisper. I'll show you."

"Do."

"Not now. You've got to be serious."

In the sunny south bedroom Wolfe found Jess's mother sitting in an arm-chair by the open window. There was a bowl full of bluebells on a table beside her, and she had been trying to write a letter, for a writing pad still lay upon her knees.

Her eyes welcomed Wolfe, though she was in too great distress to talk much.

"You're a good angel, doctor."

"They caught me as I was passing."

"I ought to be at the Manor Court at Flemyng's——"

"But you'll not go. Miss Jess has been explaining."

He stood and looked down at her in that grave penetrating way that made women and children trust him.

"Jess must go. I've been trying to write to Lawyer Fyson, Lord Blackwater's steward."

"Now don't worry about all this. It bothers you to talk. I'll sit down and plan things out for you. Stop me if you have anything to suggest."

He sat down at the table, reached for the writing pad, and began to write.

"Here's a certificate for Mr. Fyson. That settles that gentleman. Let's see; Miss Jess will have to act for you, and she'll drive down in the gig. Master Bob goes off to Navestock at once for medicine, and with a message to say I'm detained. That's it. I stay here, ride to Flemyng's Cross with Miss Jess, deliver my certificate to Mr. Fyson, see your daughter through the ordeal, and then ride home to Navestock. That sounds very practical."

Mrs. Mascall's eyes brightened.

"How do you think of things! I've been putting Jess through her paces; old Fyson's a kind sort of man. Three dozen fresh eggs, that's what the tenant of Moor Farm has to give the Lord of the Manor. You all have to whisper. They call it the Whispering Court."

"So Jess told me."

"Call the girl, doctor. Oh Jess, child, you're there? Dr. Wolfe's going to Flemyng's Cross with you. It's a weight off my chest. He'll stay and take tea. And Jess—the eggs?"

Jess had one of her solemn moments.

"I haven't got them yet, mother."

"Good gracious, child, go out and get them."

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT

By Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

CAREFUL DEFENCE

Many hands have been described in this column showing the workings of the coup, both simple and grand, wherein an opposing trump honor is captured by means of the declarer shortening himself sufficiently in trumps to finally enable himself at the twelfth trick to lead through it.

Today's hand deals with a very fine defensive play which enabled the opponents to forestall an impending coup by the declarer and thereby defeat the contract. The hand was:

South, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 10 7 ♡ J 10 ◇ A 6 5 2 ♣ K Q 10 4 3
♠ 2 ♡ A K 8 6 3 ◇ Q J 10 ♣ 8 4	W E	♠ A Q 4 2 ♡ 5 4 2 ◇ K 9 7 ♣ 7 5 2
	♠ K J 9 8 6 5 ♡ Q 9 7 ◇ 3 ♣ A J 9

The bidding: (Figures after bids in table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♠	2♡	2♣	Pass
3♠(1)	Pass	4♠(2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1. South has opened with close to a minimum hand, but in view of North's free bid at the range of three and his very fine fit with North's suit he sees hope of game. Since five clubs seems to him to be pretty difficult South decides to rebid his spades and hopes North can support them.

2. North, although he holds only the ten and seven of spades, correctly decides he must contract for game, and since he does not hold a heart stopper it must be in spades. Opposite a rebid suit the holding of the ten and one is sufficient to raise, provided the outside strength is there.

West won the first two tricks with the ace and king of hearts and then quite correctly shifted to diamonds, which declarer immediately won with the ace in dummy. The ten of spades was now led from dummy and allowed to hold the trick, and on a second spade lead East went up with the ace. It was at this point that East made a very fine defensive play. Most players in East's position would rather hurriedly try to cash the king of diamonds for the setting trick. These players would all then see the contract of four spades fulfilled against them. This particular East player realized that if there were a diamond trick for him he would shortly get it, or if he did not get it, he would have a sure trump trick. Furthermore, he realized that if declarer had held a singleton diamond he might very well be able to shorten himself enough to finally capture the queen of spades.

East knew that he would be compelled to follow the three leads of clubs and declarer would eventually be able to lead through him from dummy at the twelfth trick. Therefore this East player, after a few moments' hesitation, immediately led back a club. This play defeated the contract. The defence had gotten the jump, and South, finding himself unable to sufficiently shorten his trump holding to coup East's queen, was finally compelled to give up the last trick.

Note what would have happened had East returned the diamond king. After winning the trick with a low spade, declarer would have then cashed his queen of hearts. A low club would have been led to dummy and another diamond ruffed in the South hand. The leads of the ace and knave of clubs would have left the lead in dummy on the twelfth trick and poor East would have been helpless. No matter what card declarer chose to lead from dummy he would win the last two tricks with the king and knave of spades in his own hand.

TUESDAY'S HAND

How should North and South bid the hands below to reach the correct final contract?

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ — ♡ K Q 9 6 5 ◇ A K 8 3 2 ♣ K 10 3
♠ 10 9 6 5 4 3 2 ♡ 8 4 ◇ Q J 10 ♣ 5	W E	♠ Q 8 7 ♡ 10 3 2 ◇ 9 6 4 ♣ Q 9 6 2
	♠ A K J ♡ A J 7 ◇ 7 5 ♣ A J 7 5 4

The hand will be discussed in Tuesday's article

What Today Means

"GEMINI"

If June 4 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:50 a.m. to 11:10 a.m., from 4 p.m. to 5:20 p.m. and from 10 p.m. to 11:10 p.m. The danger periods are from 7:30 a.m. to to 8:55 a.m. and from 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m.

If you are anxious or troubled, your mind will very possibly be set at rest on this day. You may receive information which you consider of little import, but which in time will come to have a great bearing on your life. The hasty word spoken on this day will in time bring much discomfort and embarrassment to its author.

The child born on this June 4 will invariably be "Johnny-on-the-spot" when needed. A cheerful disposition, a readiness to "chip in" and help and a rare sense of good fun will endear this little one to all with whom he comes in contact. Look for this child to take his place and hold his own among the leaders of his class.

If June 4 is the date of your birth, you are probably the type of person who can fit himself into any line or kind of work where activity, brains, personality or brawn are requisite. You are an "all-around" person, and while you will probably not have a meteoric career you will be "right there at the finish." You are not afraid to step to the fore and speak your thoughts, take command when necessary and make decisions when they are required. You are a truly humble person and you have formed a true estimate of yourself which is most helpful to you. You are not a quitter when you are in the right, and you fight to the finish. On the other hand, you are not afraid to acknowledge your mistake or to reverse your course when conditions warrant it.

Born on June 4, you must guard against two things: first, a craving for change of environment and of work; second, a tendency to be fickle and changing in your affections, even after marriage. If you master yourself in these respects, you will be quite unbeatable in every way. You show a great fondness for children and always, you take care to set a good example for those about you.

MONDAY, JUNE 5

"GEMINI"

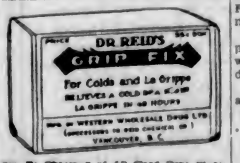

If June 5 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7:30 a.m. to 9 a.m., from 4:40 p.m. to 6 p.m. and from 10 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 7:45 p.m.

You may find yourself, as a result of influences operating on this date, in a turbulent state of mind; doubt, indecision and fear of consequences will hamper your progress. It is possible that you will meet someone on this day with whom you will later form a lasting association; it may be one of the same, or the opposite, sex.

The child born on this June 5 will in his earlier years exhibit very limited possibilities. Properly taught, handled and encouraged, he will probably show certain inclinations and talents well worth developing. Much outdoor play and exercise should be indulged in.

If June 5 is the date of your birth, you are probably a person blessed with great clarity of thought; you are direct in your analysis of problems that come to you for consideration, never allowing yourself to be thrown off the track by the invariably present mass of unrelated and obstructing detail. Your decisions are based on good reasoning, sound judgment and an ability to discern trends in the affairs of man. As counsel for some growing corporation, as a chemist or physicist, as a member of a legislative body or even as spiritual leader of a group, your abilities could be put to splendid use.

Born on June 5, you are no doubt a very dignified person; you are conventional, and you relish pomp and ceremony. The women born on this date are often social leaders; certain it is, that they are active either in church work or in carrying on the functions of this or that organization. Both the men and women seem constantly "on the go" for some good cause and at business; yet they always have time to devote to their families and friends without neglecting their other duties. Those born on this date seem to have more than the usual difficulty in working out their matrimonial problems, but there are few divorces among them.

Kipling Circle Elects Officers

The Kipling Circle held its annual general meeting last Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. A. E. T. Cornwell, with a very good attendance. Mr. Cornwell was elected president for the ensuing year, and T. A. Simmons secretary. The circle will not meet again until the Autumn, but in the meanwhile plans are being made for a number of interesting sessions next season.

Anyone interested in the works of Rudyard Kipling is cordially invited to join the circle, full particulars concerning which may be had by telephoning the president, G 3324, or Mr. Simmons, E 7877.

So Your Going to Store Your Furs at Home!

You think you might as well store your furs in your cedar chest this year—and save a couple of dollars!

You spend half a day, your whole energy, and $1.49 buying moth flakes, tar paper, moth preventatives, etc.!

You go home and spend the rest of the day wrapping, packing, sprinkling and spraying.

You smell a funny smell from the moth preventatives, and hope the odor won't cling permanently to your furs!

You find a moth flying around the room a week later—and wonder if it could get at your furs!

You go away for a week-end and begin to worry about fire and burglars!

You pick up your telephone then and there, and call Empire 7111, Fur Storage Department, for a courteous messenger who wraps your furs carefully and speeds them to where they are insured against fire, theft and moths at a small percentage on your valuation—and then you live happily ever after!

"The Bay's" Fur Storage Vaults

MAKING STUDY OF BYZANTINE MUSIC

Leopold Stokowski Will Make Perilous Ascent to Monastery on Aegean Sea

PHILADELPHIA (CP).—Leopold Stokowski, modernistic conductor of Philadelphia Orchestra, whose hobby is the study of strange, unusual music, is leaving for the Near East to delve into the little-known scores of the Byzantine Empire.

On the shores of the Aegean Sea the fair-haired maestro will be hauled in a basket up the precipitous cliff on which the monastery of the Monks of Athos is perched. For centuries these monks have perpetuated Byzantine art and culture, and Stokowski has obtained permission to study the rare books in their libraries.

"Byzantine music has always fascinated me. It is utterly unlike any other, and we know so little of it," Stokowski said.

He explained he does not plan to adapt any of it for presentation to modern audiences, his chief interest in it being to enrich his own background.

Byzantium, centre of the old Eastern Empire is now Istambul, chief city of modern Turkey. Until a few years ago it was known as Constantinople.

CLAIMS TO KNOW SECRET OF STRAD

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (CP).—Otto Sand, a skillful Swedish violin maker, claims to have detected the secret by which Stradivarius obtained the unexcelled tone of his famous violins. For twelve years Mr. Sand has tried to solve the riddle which, he says, as has been previously assumed, consists in the composition of the lacquer used by the old master.

Sand does not want to disclose his secret, but states that in analyzing the lacquer he has been guided by the smell, and that by means of a special kind of rosin obtained from Egypt he has been able to invent a lacquer of the same quality as that found on the ancient instruments. Experts at the Technical University of Stockholm will now test Mr. Sand's violins to find out whether they can confirm his claim that he can make as good violins as Stradivarius.

Miss Millie Browne, the prettiest girl in the village, had a father who snubbed all young men who came to see her.

One evening Charles Newton, a bashful young man, called. Mr. Browne and old Mr. Newton were close friends, but the boy had grown so rapidly that the old man did not recognize his visitor.

"It looks like rain," the young fellow ventured, timidly.

"Taint goin' to rain," was the gruff response.

For about a quarter of an hour they sat in silence. Finally the old man's curiosity got the better of him.

"Who are you?" he growled.

"Charles Newton."

"What! Not old Tom Newton's son?"

"Yes."

"Well, well," said Mr. Browne, more kindly, "it may rain. It may rain."

Young Boy Held on Stabbing Charge

Missions' Critics Being Subjected to Severe Criticism

Report of Laymen's Foreign Mission Inquiry Slated as Inadequate and Inaccurate, and Theology a Departure From Historic Faith—Is Challenging Document

By REV. DR. J. K. UNSWORTH

A BOMBSHELL broke on the Protestant churches of this continent last November when there was released from New York City the first messages from the laymen's inquiry into foreign missions. Newspapers carried headlines that were distinctly critical. From the meagre reports that first came out it almost seemed that the commission of fifteen Christian leaders who had prepared the document of appraisal had dynamited the whole case for the evangelization of the world. Opponents of the Christian faith expressed their satisfaction. Foreign mission boards trembled at the possible effect on the rank and file of their supporters.

In due time the full text of the report appeared and is now being widely circulated in a cheap edition under the title, "Re-Thinking Missions: a Laymen's Inquiry After One Hundred Years." The title page states that the book contains "answers to such searching questions" as: Should foreign missions be continued? If so, what changes in programme and personnel are necessary? Should denominational distinction be maintained either on the foreign field or at the home base? What should be the attitude of Protestant Christianity toward non-Christian religions?

MANY ANSWERS GIVEN

The answers given to these "searching questions" in this small but compact volume, are now being searchingly reviewed. The critics are being severely criticized. Among other deliverances, the foreign mission board of the United Church of Canada finds that the work of fact-finding and of appraisal was hurriedly done. Dr. J. L. Maxwell, of China, in one of his addresses before public bodies during his recent visit to this city, challenged the accuracy of some of the statements made concerning medical missions in China. The Presbyterian leader, Dr. Robert E. Speer, has given the book a trenchant review, and a discriminating article by Rev. Dr. Kenneth A. Latourette, of Yale University, perhaps the best informed man on missions in the Orient, is given first place in the April number of the International Review of Missions.

INVESTIGATION BROADENED

The genesis of the report was among the Baptist laymen of New York City, who found the income of their missionary society threatened. The investigation they started was broadened, until what is known as the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry was formed with membership drawn from seven denominations—the Northern Baptists, Congregationalists, Northern Methodists, Northern Presbyterians, Protestant Episcopalians (Dutch) Reformed in America and United Presbyterians. The inquiry focussed on India, Burma, China and Japan.

First of all a corps of thirty research workers, commonly known as "the Fact-Finders" made "the most careful objective study of a large cross-section of Protestant missions ever made." The second stage was when the Commission of Appraisal, a group of fifteen scholars of the highest rank, presidents of colleges and the like, spent a year visiting all four of the lands investigated. The result of these two years of study was laid before the various boards last November.

FRANK REPORT MADE

The report is a bold and frank document. Partly because of the publicity given and partly because of the extensive work done to produce it, its findings cannot be pigeon-holed and forgotten. Its drastic criticisms, its upsetting recommendations and its extreme theology make it a challenging document. Already denominational officials have passed judgments upon it, for or against. Sooner or later its contents, as they filter down through group study and casual discussion, may be expected to affect large numbers of the rank and file of Protestant Christendom, at least on this continent.

Strongest objection is made by many critics to the theology of the report. Dr. Latourette says that while denouncing sectarianism, the report is itself a partisan document, in that it represents a particular school of thought. It seems to spring from, he states, "American Liberal Protestant Christianity." It belongs to what may be termed the "left centre" of American Protestantism. "The chapters seem to speak of religion as though it were man's search for God, whereas from the beginning the vast majority of Christians have declared the gospel to be the expression of God's search for man."

DISCUSSES REPORT

Discussing the theological and philosophic basis of the report, Dr. John A. Mackay, for a long time in Latin America, and now secretary of the foreign mission board of the American Presbyterian Church (North) comments on its "inadequacy." The difference between Christianity and other religions is looked upon by the appraisers as "being merely formal in character." It elucidates Harnack's view of the essence of Christianity, and does not posit the uniqueness of Christianity and the supremacy of Christ as Saviour of the world.

Neither can the United Church of Canada accept the religious and theological basis of missions advocated in the report, states the foreign mission board of this denomination. This because the report recommends "a distinct departure from the historic basis upon which our work has hitherto been carried on." In the desire to do justice to the abiding spiritual values in the non-Christian faiths of Asia, the members of the Appraisal Commission are seriously lacking in appreciation of the transcendent values in the Christian faith itself.

HURRIED APPRAISAL

The United Church board estimates, too, that the "work both of fact-finding and of appraisal was too hurriedly done" and the necessary limitations of study does not warrant the dogmatic conclusions published. The recommendation for the setting up on this continent of a super-board, having control of all foreign mission activities in Asia, is stated to be "both grandiose and impracticable." This church favors, however, the greatest possible co-operation at home and abroad and elimination of sectarianism. The ten volumes of the historic meeting in Jerusalem of the International Missionary Council are considered by many as being a more reliable study of foreign missions than that which is found in Re-Thinking Missions.

That the report has "outstanding excellences" is stressed by Dr. Latourette. Written by friends of missions, it is courageous, sounds no note of pessimism nor retreat, and gives a fresh viewpoint on foreign missionary problems. He mentions seven of its proposals as being of the highest importance, among them the selection of missionary candidates, indigenous leadership and the necessity of co-operation. In a similar strain is the commendation of the United Church deliverance.

The Chinese Recorder welcomes the criticism as being a stimulant to spiritual growth. Writing in this magazine a missionary reminds its readers that "the report represents an arduous and loving labor by friends of Christ's cause." He insists, too, that revolutionary changes in the Orient demand a fresh examination of the church's work there.

Girl Guides' Annual Fete Is Arranged

The Girl Guides of Greater Victoria district will hold their annual garden fete on Saturday. By the kindness of Mrs. Atkins the function will take place in the spacious grounds of the old Gonzales estate, 615 St. Charles Street.

The attractive programme includes the march past at 3 o'clock, in charge of Miss Hilda Leighton, when the salute will be taken by Mrs. Gale, deputy provincial commissioner. Displays of Guide work folk dancing will be given, and Brownie revels will introduce the youngest branch of the Guide movement.

With the approach of the Summer holidays, Guides the world over are looking forward to camping, when some of the jolliest days of the Guide year are enjoyed, and the opportunity arrives to put into practice the knowledge of wood lore, camp cookery and other wisdom gathered during the year. In these glorious days comes the chance to perfect themselves in swimming and to indulge in wonderful hikes in the country air; to enjoy a thoroughly wholesome holiday which will bring them back healthy and strong, ready once more for school routine.

To raise the funds for camping and other necessary expenses, guides have been busy preparing dainty needlework, novelties, home cooking and candies, and planning side shows for the amusement of their patrons, it being part of the guide training to earn the required funds to carry on. Afternoon tea will be served by the ladies of the local association. No charge will be made for admission, and the Guides extend a very cordial invitation to all friends of the movement.

For Better or For Worse

A BLACK cat—bright omen? The sister of the Earl of Antrim, Lady Rose McDonnell, and her husband, Francis Baring, find a black cat sleeping in the doorway of the church at Godalming, England, where they were married.

Saltspring Island

A delightful party took place recently, when Mrs. N. W. Wilson was hostess, at her home on Saltspring, to some twenty guests at the tea hour. Most of the afternoon was spent in the beautiful garden and on the verandas, tea being served indoors. The table was artistically decorated with violas, pink rock roses, London pride and mauve tulips. Among those present were Mrs. George Aitkens, Miss F. Aitkens, Mesdames Borradaile, C. E. Baker, E. Borradaile, Fred Crofton, Frank Crofton, Desmond Crofton, Reginald Freeman, Miss K. Frampton, Mrs. J. D. Halley, Miss M. Holford, Mesdames D. E. Scott, Frank Scott, Alex Scoones, C. Springford, A. J. Smith, Miss Shirley Wilson, Miss Clair Wilson and others.

Mrs. A. Douglas Smith, of Victoria, is spending a few days on the island as the guest of Miss K. Frampton, of Vesuvius Bay.

Miss Emblyn Middleton and Miss J. Middleton, of Stow, England, have arrived on the island and will be guests for some months of their sister, Mrs. D. Simson, of North Saltspring.

• • •

Mrs. Reginald Freeman, of Victoria, is the guest for a few days of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Crofton, of Ganges.

Miss Ida Beech, of Victoria, is spending two weeks on the island as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Holmes. She will afterwards visit her brother, Mrs. S. P. Beech, of Ganges.

• • •

Mrs. Price has returned home after two days spent in Victoria as the guest of her daughter, Mrs. C. E. Ley.

Late Gardeners

If you still want rock plants this season, it is not too late yet. For late gardeners we offer these plants in pots, so that they may be planted out immediately without danger of loss. Planted thus, they never know they have been moved. Our nursery will interest you in this season of blossom, whether you need plants or not, and in any garden work we can save you money, with assured satisfaction.

FOOLS SUPPORT PAYING RACKET

Many Seek Fortune as Presumptive Heirs to Non-existent Estates

MONTREAL (CP).—A very profitable, if not original racket is gaining favor in Canada and the United States, recent correspondence received by the consul-general of United States in Montreal shows. An item appears in the newspapers to the effect a certain rich man has died leaving no direct heirs. Not only one but hundreds of gullible citizens are persuaded to believe they are entitled to a share in the vast estate, and they make a very doubtful investment to an unknown man to "fight for their rights." They never see the man again and are surprised to hear nothing about their "fortune."

For example, the American consul-general at London, in an official statement to the local consul-general, points out he has received no less than 5,000 claims from Americans who have been led to believe they are the missing heirs of the "Jennings estate." In addition to this number, there are innumerable claimants from other countries. In certain towns of America whole villages have been led to contribute funds to press claims for the "Jennings estate," which is, of course, an imaginary one.

The American consul-general in London has done everything possible to discourage people from contributing funds towards the prosecution of claims to estates which do not exist. So many inquiries have been received by British officials regarding numerous fictitious estates, that the matter has become a standing joke. The consul expresses regret that people cannot be convinced that the expenditure of funds without the proof of existence of such estates is absolutely useless, and such people are merely making it easier for the confidence men to work the racket.

English Davis Cup Player Loses to Joro Satoh in Hard Five-Set Match

AUTEUIL, France, June 2 (AP).—The American champion, Helen Jacobs, seeking the title vacated by Helen Wills Moody, today advanced another step in quest of the French hard court singles championship. She rallied to defeat Jacqueline Goldschmidt, French indoor titleholder, to enter the semi-final round, 1-6, 6-1, 6-3.

Tomorrow Miss Jacobs will face Mme. Rene Mathieu, the No. 1 French player, to determine who will go into the finals against the winner of the all-English semi-final between Betty Nuthall and Margaret Scriven. The final will be played Monday.

Miss Jacobs was slow hitting her stride today, but after Mme. Goldschmidt had taken five straight games in the first set, the Californian began to get the range. She won the first five games of the second and went on to take the third without much trouble. Her fine placements frequently found the Frenchwoman out of position.

Miss Nuthall eliminated America's other quarter-finalist, Mrs. Dorothy Andrus Burke, 6-3, 6-1. Mrs. Burke started at a fast pace and led, 3-2, in games in the opening set before the English star gained control of her slashing drives. From there on Betty was in complete control, raking the American's court with a succession of placement shots.

The semi-final bracket of the

men's singles was completed with victories by Jiro Satoh, former Japanese champion, and H. G. N. Lee, English Davis Cup player. Henri Cochet, defending champion, and Jack Crawford, Australian titleholder, won their way into the final four yesterday. Satoh and Fred Perry, of England, put on the best exhibition of singles play seen in the tournament before the Japanese won, 1-6, 7-5, 6-4, 3-6, 6-2.

Lee entered the bracket with a four-set conquest of Marcel Bernard, promising young Frenchman, 10-8, 6-4, 5-7, 6-0.

In the semi-final, Lee will meet Cochet and Crawford will match strokes with Satoh.

BEN CHAPMAN MAKES GAIN

Yankees' Outfielder Takes Second Place in Big Six Batting Race

Ben Chapman moved up from fourth to second place in the Big Six, Pepper Martin regained his membership in the sextette and Virgil "Sput" Davis, of the Phillies, took the last place in the group yesterday, largely because of the failure of their rivals to hit. Chapman and Martin each hit twice in four trips to the plate, gaining four points apiece, while Davis held his average at .346 with two hits in six tries. Johnny Frederick, National League pacesetter, lost thirteen points with one hit in eight tries. Johnny Hodapp and Al Simmons lost three and two points respectively, with one hit each in four times up, while Chuck Klein and Pie Traynor lost enough ground to drop behind Davis.

W. Indies Score 304 for Loss of Five at Cardiff

CARDIFF, Wales, June 3 (CP).—The West Indies had scored 304 runs for the loss of five wickets, at the close of play today, in their cricket match against the county championship team, Glamorgan. George Headley scored 129 before Lavia bowled him.

Headley's score was the best of the day, while C. A. Roach's came next at 61. Frank Martin was caught by Avery, off Glover, for 49, and E. L. G. Hoad went down beneath Glover's trundling for 33.

To Give Exhibition Ride at Colonist Race

All Victoria has been talking of these flashy bike riders, all local boys who have turned professional and carved a name for themselves in the world of international sport. Friday night, just prior to the big Colonist race, they will give an exhibition ride over the same course, giving the spectators a chance to see these speed kings in action. Prior to turning professional, each one rode consistently in the Colonist races of previous years.

CRICKET IS FEATURED BY GOOD BATTING

Friendly Matches Played in Victoria and District League Yesterday

Maintaining their unbeaten record, Albions defeated Cowichan by eight wickets in a friendly cricket match played at Duncan yesterday. Wanderers triumphed over Victoria in a close match at Work Point Barracks, while Five C's beat a Colts team at Beacon Hill.

E. D. Freeman, who has made over 40 runs in every Saturday game this season, kept up his average yesterday, when he batted well to make 46 against the Up-Islanders. Davidson, with 43, also had a nice knock, while Pendray was in form with the ball, taking seven wickets for 18 runs. The Albions scored 131 for seven wickets to their opponents' 101. Williams-Freeman and Leggatt both scored 23 for Cowichan, while a youthful bowler, Collison Jr., showed he was following in his father's footsteps, when he took four wickets for 29 runs.

Both Victoria and the Wanderers showed signs of improved batting in the game at Work Point, as players began to get into mid-season form. Eric Cox, W. J. Moffatt, and Hope all batted well for Victoria, while Grant, Darcus and Thorne showed good form for the Wanderers. The match was exciting, the Wanderers wanting 6 runs to win with one wicket to fall. Gill, the last man in, kept up his wicket well, while Grant went for the runs with great success. The latter hit three consecutive "sixes" off Meredith.

The boys showed great keenness and quite a little ability in the Colts match against the Five C's, at Beacon Hill. While the senior team won fairly easily, the lads were on their toes all the time and fielded well. E. Butterworth was in charge of the boys.

Lloyd's Pharmacy Captures Junior B.C. Soccer Title

NANAIMO, June 3 (CP).—George Scott's smashing drive, three minutes before the final whistle, gave Lloyd's Pharmacy, of Vancouver, a 2-1 victory over Nanaimo Park Rangers and the O. B. Allan Cup, emblematic of the British Columbia junior soccer championship, here, today.

HALIFAX, June 3 (CP).—Carried to victory by an easy unfaltering stride, Noel Paul, Springhill Indian, today hung up a new course record in winning the annual ten-mile Halifax modified marathon. Paul's time was fifty-three minutes twenty-seven seconds.

JOKERS WIN FROM JAMES ISLAND, 6-0

Capture Junior Football League Championship in Decisive Manner

Strengthened by the return of "Tubby" Stevens, and the presence of "Scotty" Robinson and Wilmshurst, two seniors, Manager Tommy Rickinson and his Jokers football eleven climaxed a great season in junior circles, yesterday afternoon, on the lower Beacon Hill Park grounds, by winning the Junior League championship from James Island, by a 6-to-0 score. The local eleven succeeds Duncan Native Sons, who graduated to the senior ranks at the beginning of the present campaign.

Although half a dozen goals separated the teams at the finish, the Islanders fought hard and missed several chances to score by shooting wide from close proximity. Jokers had the edge during the first half hour, and ran in three goals. From then on to the end James Island fought back stubbornly, but it was a losing battle all the way.

OPENS SCORE

Les Kennedy, centre half, opened the scoring ten minutes after the whistle with a beautiful shot. The Jokers continued to press with a wind behind them, and "Scotty" Robinson scored their second goal. The Islanders packed their defence in an attempt to keep the onrushing Jokers' forwards at bay, but Robinson broke through again to make it 3-0 at the interval.

The second half was more evenly fought, but the scoring laurels again went to the Jokers. Robinson performed the "hat trick" with his third straight tally, while Wilf Stewart and Gelling registered before full time.

STRONG DEFENCE

One of the features of the game was the fine defence work of Larry Kennedy and Ray Rickinson, Jokers' fullbacks. They broke up numerous attacks and sent their half line and forwards away on some beautiful rushes. Wilmshurst also turned in a fine game in goal for the winners.

Brigden refereed and teams follow:

Jokers—Wilmshurst; Larry Kennedy and Rickinson; Brown, Les Kennedy and McLean; Gelling, Robinson, Stevens, Stewart, and Addison.

James Island—A. Cowden; W. Thompson and Roper; D. Thompson, Fields and Rivers; Bond, Devlin, Dixon, W. Cowden, and Rowebottom.

Slingers Will Face Cameron's Tomorrow Night

STILL in search of their first victory of the season, Manager Ed Miles will send his Slingers ball squad out with plenty of confidence tomorrow evening when they clash with Cameron's Lumber, league leaders, in the Senior Amateur Baseball League at the Royal Athletic Park at 6:15. Slingers are a fighting ball club, and although they have dropped four games, all have been by close margins. Leo Holden is expected to heave for the winerymen, with Ainie Worthington, former Tillicums' backstop, behind the plate, while Goldie McKinney will do the mound work for the lumbermen, with hard-working Bill Bridgewood donning the armor.

TELEPHONES DEFEAT VACS

Bill Richardson Pitches "Hello" Boys to 5-3 Victory in Vancouver Ball

VANCOUVER, June 3 (AP).—When Don Stewart boosted one over right field fence with a runner on first base in the fifth, the Phones shook loose the Vacs' hold on the senior ball game, and when Cameron came home two innings later, the Phones were set for their 5-3 victory.

Experience aided the Telephones, for Coley Hall sent in a rookie pitcher, young Lyle Whitley, of Everett High School. The Phones might not have gained their opening advantage if he had not had a bad start in the first and then walked three in quick succession in the third.

Bill Richardson, for the Phones, was steady and reliable. He kept the V.A.C. down to six scattered hits. Except for the opening frame, when the Vacs sent two across the plate, he was always in command.

Gun Club Will Stage Meet at Colwood Traps

Second shoot of the season will be held by the Victoria Gun Club this morning at the Colwood traps, at 9:30 o'clock. The clay bird experts will fire in The Colonist, Dominion and McGary Cup events, and some close competition is expected. Ammunition will be supplied on the grounds.

Levinsky Gains Ten-Round Call Over Griffiths

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP).—King Levinsky, Chicago's celebrated fish peddler, defeated "Tuffy" Griffiths, Sioux City, Iowa, heavyweight, in ten bruising rounds in Mills Stadium tonight, opening the outdoor boxing season.

Chairman Joseph Triner, of the Illinois State Athletic Commission, announced Levinsky's purse would be held up pending an investigation into the fighter's conduct in the ring.

Levinsky, Triner said, was guilty of roughing, not only Griffiths, but Referee Collins.

Griffiths said he sustained a severe fracture of the right hand in the second round.

Victoria's Four Famous Six-Day Riders to Give Exhibition Before Annual Daily Colonist Race Friday Evening—Will Start Just Before Class "A" Riders—Plans Completed

The Daily Colonist Eleventh Annual Bicycle Road Race, scheduled for Friday evening, has drawn huge crowds every year to the course and pack around the starting point at the corner of Quadra and Kings Road. This year the spectators will be given an added thrill, the opportunity to see four famous professional riders in action, all of them local boys, who have graduated through the classes of the Colonist Race, of previous years, until they broke into the ring of professional racing, where they have each and all made good. It was officially announced last night that "Torchy" Peden, Lew Rush, "Stonewall" Jackson and "Polly" Parrott would give an exhibition ride around the eight and a half mile course, showing Victorians a first hand glimpse of the style that has blazoned these four names in the annals of international sport.

They will speed away from the starting point shortly in advance of the time set for Class "A" riders. There is no competition in this ride, being simply an exhibition, of the way, in which professionals handle their bikes, and the speed and staying power which has won them international acclaim.

PEDEN IN SHAPE

Foremost among the group of four is "Torchy" Peden. For four years he rode the course as an amateur, and four times he was placed among the first three to break the tape. In 1929 he decided to turn to the professional game, and since that time the fiery thatched young giant has piled up record after record. His first race was in 1929 in Montreal, where he finished second, partnered with Bill Coles in the six-day event. Since then he has lead the field fourteen times out of twenty - six races, forcing tribute from the racing world as the six-day race king. He is acknowledged as the veteran rider of the four local boys and the other three readily pay tribute to his wise guidance, which has shown them the way to victory and success.

Lew Rush rode first in the Colonist Race of 1928, when he finished third in "A" class.

FORMER WINNER

In 1931 he captured second place in the same class. The following year he won the coveted Colonist Cup, awarded the rider making the fastest time around the course, and from that time he determined to stick to the cycling game. He went to the 1932 Olympics, where his excellent showing was sufficient to warrant his entry into the professional field. In September he rode with Torchy in the six-day Vancouver event, and from there he has ridden in Toronto, Montreal, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and St. Louis. His fine record achieved in April and May of this year has assured him of good contracts throughout the coming twelve months.

Stonewall Jackson has achieved an equally glowing record. Riding in the Colonist Race first in 1926, he was placed fifth, and next year third. For some time he was at sea and his bike lay unused, but in 1931 he returned. In 1932 he again placed third in Class "A" and went South to the Olympics where he entered the 100-kilometer races. He too was considered by promoters to be sufficiently strong to break into the professional circles and he made his debut in the Vancouver six-day race, partnered with Torchy. Bad luck dogged his footsteps and while leading the field on the fourth day he had a spill and broke his collarbone. On recovery he went East to face one of the finest fields ever assembled on the continent at Montreal. Since then he has consistently made good, with a promising future opening up before him.

PARROTT TO RIDE

"Polly" Parrott also broke into cycling through the Colonist Race, entering first in 1928. In 1931 he turned professional, riding with Jimmy Davies in the Vancouver fifty-mile race. His most outstanding achievement was with Torchy Peden in Milwaukee when they lead the field to a sensational win in the six-day event in January, 1932. He has raced in all parts of the country since then and is reckoned as one of the most coming riders in the game.

ENTRIES TO CLOSE

This added attraction will give even greater prominence to the Colonist Race, which already promises to be one of the most outstanding events ever held here. Entries are pouring in, for riders are warned that Tuesday, 6 p.m., is the time set for the closing of the lists. A strong contingent is expected from the Mainland, but local boys are ready to give a tough battle before they allow the honors to again leave the Island.

RAINBOW CUP CAPTURED BY JACK MATSON

Southpaw Displays Fine Golf in Winning Annual Meet at Oak Bay Links

Shattering par on the outward nine by a single stroke, and then coming home in 37, one over perfect figures, Jack Matson, star left-hander, displayed beautiful golf yesterday to capture the annual Rainbow Cup competition, at the Victoria Golf Club, by finishing three up on "Old Man Par." Matson equalled par over the eighteen holes, shooting a fine 69. The tournament was match play against par, with three-quarters of handicaps allowed. Thirty-three teed off in the meet.

Matson went out in 32, caging a pair of birdies, six pars and went over par once. Coming home, he went over twice, sank a birdie on twelfth and parred the rest of the holes. A. B. Crump finished second, being one up, while H. F. Hepburn and H. N. Lay shared third place, being all square.

The winner's card follows:

TWO EVENTS ADDED TO WOMENS MEET

VANCOUVER, June 3 (CP). — Miss Ann Clark, secretary of the Women's Amateur Athletic Federation of Canada, announced yesterday that the sixty and eighty-meter hurdles have been included in the women's British Columbia track and field championships which will be held July 1 at Penticton.

NANNIE D CAPTURES HANDICAP AT COLWOOD

Jockey Chidgey Rides Winner in Feature of Card

Boy Gives Favorite Fine Ride in Copping King's Birthday Handicap by Neck—Favorites Take Five of Seven Events—Prices Are Short

Under a fine ride by Jockey Chidgey, the favorite, Nannie D won the King's Birthday Handicap feature of the opening card at the Colwood mile track yesterday. Ideal weather conditions prevailed and a large crowd visited the enclosure to watch the sport of kings. Favorites had a big day and won five of the seven events. The meet will continue all this week.

No startling prices were posted on the mutuel board, the longest being when May Upset captured the sixth race to return $14.80. Dale Showers, in winning her second straight out paid $8.35. The one-two bet was worth $8.90 and the daily double $7.15.

Some fine races were witnessed during the day and two of the finishes brought the crowd to its feet. In the handicap, Nannie D took a neck call over Plenty Gold, with Tommie Doyle a close third. The first race won by Nellie Basil was also stoutly contested.

White and Hughes led the riders with two winners. Thorogood, Chidgey and Sporri were up on the other winning mounts.

NELLIE BASIL WINS

The favorite, Nellie Basil, won the opening race over five furlongs. Miss Zelpha was second, and Better Day, third. Nellie Basil was rated behind the pace until the head of the home stretch, then moved up to take the lead and win in a canter. Miss Zelpha and Better Day alternated in setting the early pace. Jockey Athey was hit in the head by a flying stone and suffered a deep gash.

Coming from last place on the home stretch, the favorite, Bellarion, won the second event after a thrilling race. Oregon Mist was second, and Clarimonde Hope, third. Bellarion followed the pace until the last eighth, then finding an opening, went through to win by a length. Shasta Limited, Clarimonde Hope and Oregon Mist were in the lead at intervals.

DALE SHOWERS GALLOPS

Coming on the outside of her field, Dale Showers took the decision in the third race. Jim Rogan, running as an entry with Tusculotta, was second, and Evelyn May, third. The favorite, Belle Somers, was fourth. Dale Showers, after breaking slowly, raced to the rest of the runners to win by two lengths. Jim Rogan was a good second. Evelyn May opened up a good lead in the early running, but tired.

The aged gelding, Shortway, made a show of the field in taking the fourth event. Honey Thistle was second, and Paved Way, third. Shortway, always close to the pace, took the lead at the head of the stretch, and galloped home a winner by three lengths. Honey Thistle set the pace until caught by the winner.

THE FEATURE RACE

The favorite, Nannie D, took the King's Birthday Handicap, feature event of the day, after a thrilling race. Plenty Gold was second, and Tommie Doyle, third. Nannie D broke on top of the field of five, opened up a good lead and gamely held off the closing challenge of Plenty Gold and Tommie Doyle, to win by a neck. Scarcely a length separated the first three. Cassinette and Lady Aggie were badly beaten.

Going to the top, after turning into the stretch, May Upset, with White up, won the sixth race by a length. Silk Train, who set the early pace, was second, a length in front of Clear Star. The latter closed strongly in gaining the show berth. Silk Train was an entry with Mail Train.

WILL WARD ON TOP

Will Ward had the speed of his field in winning the seventh race handily. Highway was second, and Miss Elkhorn, third. Will Ward was rushed to the front from the barrier, opened up a good lead to win by three lengths. Highway improved his position constantly in taking the place berth. Miss Elkhorn was always well up.

To Pilot American League All-Stars

CONNIE MACK

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP).—Connie Mack, dean of baseball managers, today accepted the invitation of American League, to lead the junior William Harridge, president of the circuit's forces against John McGraw and his National League stars in baseball's biggest game, at Comiskey Park, July 6.

McGraw, manager of the New York Giants for thirty years, several days ago agreed to come out of retirement for one day to manage the nation's choice as National League standard bearers, and Mack's acceptance will renew the most famous individual rivalry in the game.

BOWLERS ENJOY KING'S BIRTHDAY

"I want some cigarettes for my nephew," she said.

"Certainly, madam," said the tobacconist. "What particular brand does he smoke?"

"Oh, dear," said the old lady, "I really forget the name, but it's the one advertisements speak of so highly."

An irrational number is any number that cannot be expressed as the quotient of two integers.

Nellie Basil, outfooted in the early stages, came on the outside of the leaders and going to the front soon after turning for home, had the race well in hand from there to the wire. Miss Zelpha, fractious at the post, broke in a tangle on the outside, behind the field, was in front after passing the quarter pole, but could not resist the winner. Better Day had the most early speed. Winner entered to be claimed for $300.

Overweights—Greenwoods (1), Betler Day (3). Nellie Basil (3).

Bellarion, delaying the start by his unruly actions, settled down to running after turning for home and coming out of the pack inside the eighth pole, was going away at the finish. Oregon Mist held on with courage to get the call over Clarimonde Hope. Rosamond ran a good race but bore out slightly on the last turn. The field entered the home stretch very closely bunched. Winner entered to be claimed for $300.

Dale Showers, running well in hand, gradually wore the leaders down midway in the stretch, under the whip, to win going away. Jim Rogan raced Evelyn May into defeat early in the drive but could not cope with the winner's rush. Belle Somers was outfooted throughout. Tusculotta had early speed but weakened in the final eighth. Ethel Star failed to untrack. Winner entered to be claimed for $300. Overweights—Ethel Star (1), Golden Flower (4).

Shortway, running close up on the pace from the start and being well placed for the drive, came on resolutely to win as if much the best. Honeythistle had the most speed but lacked the winner's stamina. Paved Way was much the best of the others. Swift Cop shuffled back soon after the start, moved up when Macushla II. and Shoreboat tired. Winner entered to be claimed for $300.

Will Ward, possessing the most speed and showing willingness at all times, quickly opened daylight on his field and was never challenged. Highway, a trailer until turning for home, ran over his field but never threatened the winner. Miss Elkhorn, running in early restraint, closed with determination although hopelessly beaten. Mad Spasm quit after chasing the pace for three-quarters. Winner entered to be claimed for $300. Overweights—Highway (2), Bee Sax (3), Mad Spasm (1), Skootin (1).

VON ELM AND FOULIS KEEP TOURNEY LEAD

Pair Match Strokes Again to Head St. Paul Open Golf Meeting

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 3 (AP). A par shelling brigade laid down a heavy barrage of brilliant performances at Keller Course today, but the firing failed to dislodge George Von Elm, stubborn Teuton, and Jimmy Foulis, of Chicago, from the lead in the $5,000 St. Paul open with their thirty-six hole records of 142.

Deadlocked yesterday with par smashing 70's, Von Elm and Foulis, a newcomer to the tournament, matched each other again today with perfect 72's, to keep even at the half-way mark in the battle for top money of $1,500. One shot behind them, riding in with a great 69, was Olin Dutra, of Los Angeles, national professional champion.

IDEAL CONDITIONS

Par was broken four times and equalled by seven others todays, as the notorious windstorm of Keller stayed away to give the golfers ideal playing conditions. Ed Dudley, of Wilmington, Del., shot rounds of 33-35 for a 68, to jump from a tie for twenty-seventh yesterday into the running with a thirty-six-hole total of 147. Neil White, University of Southern California sophomore, shared a 148. Pat Sawyer, of Minneapolis, nineteen-year-old Minnesota amateur champion, was the fourth to rout par with a 73.

EQUIPOISE SHOWS FORM IN HANDICAP

C. V. Whitney's Great Thoroughbred Wins Rich Race by Four Lengths

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP). — Swinging through the stretch with long, powerful strides that left his nine rivals far to the rear, C. V. Whitney's Equipoise, greatest of American thoroughbreds, today won the Metropolitan Handicap for the second successive year, defeating one of the finest fields ever to compete in the forty runnings of the mile classic at Belmont Park.

Although burdened with the top impost of 128 pounds and giving from five to thirty-three pounds to his rivals the son of Pennant never left any doubt as to his superiority. His time of 1:37 2-5 was three seconds slower than his American record of 1:34 2-5 but he was not forced to give his best. At the finish Sonny Workman had the colt under wraps, four lengths in front of Mrs. Dodge Sloane's lightly-weighted three-year-old, Okapi, and four lengths in front of the Howe Stable's Scotch Gold, an added starter.

QUESTIONNAIRE FOURTH

James Butler's Questionnaire, winner of the event in 1931 and picked as the only horse capable of giving Equipoise an argument, was a close fourth after a bad start. It was the son of Sting's first start in over a year.

In winning his second start of the year, Equipoise jumped into fifth place, ahead of his stable mate, Top Flight, and right on the heels of A. O. Bostwick's Mate in the list of American money winners. With the $4,725 he acquired so easily, "Ekky" boosted his total earnings to $278,310. Backers of the Whitney speedster received 4 to 5 for their confidence.

WANTS RETURN MIX IN SOUTH

Sacramento Fans Urging for Second Bout Between Jimmy and Corbett on Labor Day

SACRAMENTO, Cal., June 3 (AP)—Sacramento will make a strong bid for the rematch of the world's championship fight between Jimmy McLarnin, the welterweight champion, by virtue of his one-round knockout over Young Corbett, in Los Angeles, last Monday night, and the now ex-champion and foremost challenger.

Civic leaders and state fair officials met here last night with Larry White, Corbett's business manager, and went into details toward staging the big battle, here, as a state fair entertainment feature on Labor Day.

Representatives from the Chamber of Commerce, the Sacramento Convention Bureau, the Retail Merchants' Association, hotel organizations, and the state fair board of directors, attended tonight's meeting with White, and laid the groundwork for the match.

A committee will be appointed at another meeting Monday, to enter into negotiations with Pop Foster, McLarnin's manager.

KEEN COMPETITION MARKS UNIVERSITY SPORTS

Two in Tie for Senior Laurels At School Meet

Don Menzies and Paul Rowe Each Score Twelve Points at Annual Sports—Don Berry Wins Intermediate and Joe Beech Junior Award

Flashing to the tape yards in front of the rest of the field in the final event on the programme, Don Menzies captured five open events to finish in a tie with Paul Rowe for the senior championship of University School, in the annual track and field meet, held yesterday afternoon, on the Mount Tolmie grounds. Both competitors garnered twelve points each and will share possession of the Corsan Cup for the next twelve months. Don Berry won the intermediate title and the Worthington Cup, while Joe Beech walked off with the junior crown and the Marpole Trophy. In the house competition, the East lads won by a good majority over the West representatives.

Following the meet, Premier S. F. Tolmie presented the silverware and other awards to the youngsters.

EQUALS RECORD

In finishing in a deadlock for the senior honors, Rowe and Menzies gathered in the lion's share of honors in the open events. Rowe's most brilliant performance was the equalling of the century dash record in 10 2-5 seconds. He broke fast and finished strong, never being in danger as he sprinted to the tape. The record was first made in 1912 by F. Wyld, equalled by Fred Cabeldu in 1923, and tied again in 1929 by D. Gardner.

Rowe also won the 220 yards, the quarter-mile and throwing the cricket ball, while Menzies showed great form in capturing the 120 yards hurdles, the half-mile and throwing the cricket ball and the high jump.

Don Berry annexed eleven points to cop the intermediate trophy, while Galt Martin was runner-up with six. Winning five firsts in sensational style, Joe Beach had things his own way in the junior competition and finished with fifteen points. Holstein iii was runner-up with seven.

OLD BOYS LOSE

After being sent away to a good start by Godfrey Wenman, the Old Boys dropped the annual relay race against the School. Mercer held his own in the second lap for the ex-students, but a poor change with the baton to Renwick lost them their chances of victory. Frank Skillings ran anchor, but Rowe was given a good start on the last leg of the race and could not be overtaken. Inverarity won the Old Boys' century dash with Dick George a close second. Godfrey Wenman really won the race, but as he had spiked shoes, Inverarity was awarded first position.

Results follow:

Two Hundred and Twenty Yards, Open—1, Rowe; 2, Buchanan; 3, Philipsen. Time, :22 4-5.

Reds Turn Back Pittsburgh in Both Ends of Twin Bill—Cubs Trim Cards—Yankees Take Slugfest from A's—Ruth Smacks Homer

NATIONAL LEAGUE

PITTSBURGH, June 3 (AP).—Jack Quinn went to the rescue of the Cincinnati Reds, today, and pushed the Pittsburgh Pirates down to a tie with New York for third place in the standing.

After the Reds won the first, 9 to 5, Pittsburgh threatened in the ninth inning of the second game by scoring three runs. Quinn relieved Kolp in the box, and retired the side to give Cincinnati the victory, 5 to 4.

LOCALS DEFEAT LANGFORD, 5-3

Victoria Lawn Tennis Club Scores Second Win of Season in Island League

Winning three out of four of the mixed doubles matches, Victoria Lawn Tennis Club scored its second straight victory in the Third Division of the Vancouver Island League yesterday afternoon by defeating Langford on their home courts by a 5 to 3 score. Victoria won both the women's doubles, and dropped both in the men's doubles.

Scores, with the Langford players first mentioned, follow:

WOMEN'S DOUBLES

Mrs. LeQuesne and Miss Wilson lost to Misses Lawson and French, 4-6, 3-6.

Mrs. Hincks and Miss Woodmass lost to Mrs. Moorehouse and Miss Mosley, 5-6, 3-6.

MEN'S DOUBLES

Wilkinson and Brown won from Rev. S. Ryall and W. G. Agar, 5-6, 6-3, 6-4.

LeQuesne and Hincks won from H. B. Witter and H. S. Hurn, 5-6, 6-1, 6-1.

MIXED DOUBLES

Mrs. LeQuesne and Wilkinson lost to Miss Lawson and Ryall, 6-3, 4-6, 7-9.

Miss Wilson and Brown lost to Miss French and Agar, 2-6, 5-6.

Mrs. Woodmass and LeQuesne won from Miss Mosley and Witter, 6-5, 6-5.

Mr. and Mrs. Hincks lost to Mrs. Moorehouse and Hurn, 2-6, 3-6.

W. MULDOON PASSES IN 89TH YEAR

Grand Old Man of Athletics Dies—Was New York Boxing Commissioner

PURCHASE, N.Y., June 3 (AP).—William Muldoon, New York State boxing commissioner, and grand old man of athletics, died today in his eighty-ninth year.

The veteran sportsman, a noted expert on health methods, originator of the "health farm idea," and intimate of leading sports figures for half a century, succumbed shortly before 5 a.m. at his estate here.

Only nine days ago he celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday. His first experience with a sickbed was two years ago when he fell from a horse. Later he recovered and announced he would "live for many more years," but the tell-tale ailments of old age began to take their toll, and on his last birthday he was confined to his home.

During his career Muldoon was a drummer boy in the United States Civil War, a former Graeco-Roman wrestling champion of the world, exactor, and czar of boxing in his state.

He was a farm boy, sturdy, and fifteen, when he enlisted for the war between the states. His next regular job was on the New York police force. From there he went to professional wrestling, which took him on a tour of the world, including the Orient. Then came the business of training prize-fighters.

TAMES SULLIVAN

John L. Sullivan, Boston strong boy, was "tamed" by his stern methods at a time when the unruly Sullivan badly needed conditioning. The story goes that the taming process culminated in a rough and tumble in which Muldoon's wrestling skill convinced the boxer he had better behave.

When he left the boxing business and devoted himself to the health-farm idea he became a millionaire. Presidents, bankers, and Titans of industries were numbered among his patrons and staunch friends.

During his stage career, he appeared with Maurice Barrymore, Ros Cochlan, Robert Downing and other stars, playing "strong man" roles in such vehicles as "Spartacus and the Gladiators."

Muldoon died a few minutes before 4 a.m. (Eastern standard time).

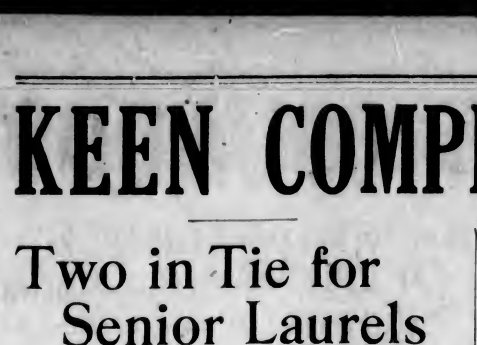

A year ago he underwent an operation for an abdominal disorder and lately had been suffering from exhaustion brought on by warm weather and arthritis.

"He makes me tired," said one. "He thinks he's so all-fired important."

"Well, he is," retorted the other. "He's a pretty big man around town."

"Yeah!" flipped his friend. "The hippopotamus is the biggest animal in the zoo—and what does that get him?"

New bungalows in London have rubber floors. Occupants must be careful not to annoy the cook or she'll simply bounce out of the house.

Regarding School Zones

Answers to Traffic Situation No. 4

(a) Where "School" signs are displayed, legal driving speed is fifteen miles per hour between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. on any day in which school is in session.

(b) Between dawn and dusk, motor vehicles must slow down to & fifteen miles an hour when passing any public school or play-(c) ground where signs are displayed sufficient to warn driver that he is approaching a playground for children.

(d) You must always remain at or return to the scene of your accident, to render all possible assistance to anyone sustaining loss or injury. If accident results in damages exceeding $25, driver must report in writing as soon as possible or not later than twenty-four hours to chief of police of the city or municipality.

(e) Stop and render all possible assistance.

(f) Secure license number and description of car and immediately notify the police.

This series is offered to the motoring public as a friendly contribution to the safety of drivers and pedestrians everywhere in British Columbia. Answers are based either on Provincial Motor Vehicle Act regulations or, where they so apply, on City bylaws. In some instances, local bylaws may differ slightly from the above, but the principles governing safe driving apply equally in crowded thoroughfares and to all highways serving the lesser populated districts.

B. C. Mining Fields Are in Spotlight

Improved Conditions in B.C. Gold Mining Seen Following New Activity

Great Increase in Production of Yellow Metal Is Expected This Year—Placer as Well as Lode Properties Will Increase Yields—Any Rise in Base Metals Will Bring Prosperity

By HON. W. A. McKENZIE

GOLD mining gave British Columbia a start in the year 1858. There is every reason to believe that gold mining will play an important part in lifting British Columbia from bad to good times in 1933. It is a strange fact that last year's record was low in point of the value of mineral produced and high as to the results obtained by mine operators and prospectors. Metal output was worth $26,675,517, as compared to $68,245,448 in 1929. On the face of it this does not look good. The explanation is so simple that it need only be incidentally referred to in passing. Low silver and base metal prices in the world markets are at the root of the trouble. But our mine operators are emerging from the crucible of economic stress wonderfully. Their achievements in the reduction of metallurgical costs and their success in the discovery and the development of new gold properties is renewing their faith and the faith of the general investing public in them and in the mineral resources of the province.

OUTLOOK BRIGHTER

Within the past few weeks there has been a promising turn in the trend of the price of silver and base metals. It is too early as yet to predict that this is a definite and permanent improvement, but it is distinctly encouraging. In 1932 the average price for copper was 5.55 cents per pound; the latest New York quotation is 7.50 cents. Lead was 3.18 cents; in April last it was 3.26 cents per pound. Zinc was 2.87 cents; in April it was 3.29 cents per pound. Silver was 27.89 cents an ounce; the latest quotation is 34.95 cents.

These are all advances. They are not so substantial that it is possible to say with assurance that they mark the real beginning of a turn in the tide of depression in respect of the mining industry. At the same time they are most encouraging and significant. What they mean in so far as British Columbia is concerned is well indicated in the reports of the leading executives of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada in dealing with this company's business during 1932.

EXPECT IMPROVEMENT

James J. Warren, president of the company, said, among other things, "Conditions are still so unsettled that it is impossible to gauge the future with any degree of certainty. Occasionally the trend seems to be toward slow but gradual recovery, but then something happens to interrupt progress and depress prices again. Current prices are so low that, being below cost of many producers, improvements should not be delayed much longer."

W. M. Archibald, vice-president in charge of mines for the same company, said: "All that is needed is improvement in metal prices. Even a slight one would mean substantial profits on account of the company's large production."

These observations apply with equal force to other mining operators in British Columbia. They show that if the improvement in prices to which attention is directed is permanent and may be accepted as the commencement of a steady return to normal conditions, it is of great importance to this province. It means a steady increase of employment in the mines and it will result in British Columbia assuming her interrupted march towards new records in point of the annual value of mineral production.

Product	Quantity 1931	Quantity 1932	Value, $ 1931	Value, $ 1932
Gold, lods. oz.	146,039	184,350	3,018,894	3,810,846
Gold, placer, oz.	17,176	19,412	391,092	320,004
Silver, oz.	7,524,320	7,200,000	2,247,514	2,280,672
Copper, lbs.	63,194,299	48,600,000	5,289,363	3,064,716
Lead, lbs.	246,783,508	253,000,000	6,742,262	5,416,730
Zinc, lbs.	206,071,247	130,000,000	5,237,520	3,145,320
Coal, tons (2,240 lbs.)	1,707,590	1,500,548	7,884,155	6,377,329
Structural materials	....	....	3,553,300	1,750,000
Miscellaneous metals and minerals	....	....	818,161	500,000
Totals			34,863,181	26,675,517

British Columbia has experienced a marked increase of interest in the search for and the development of gold properties during the past year. With its area of 372,630 square miles and its relatively small population of 694,000, British Columbia has a wide field for mineral exploration. Its mining industry received its start in the middle of the past century through the finding of the wonderfully rich gold field of the Cariboo. It continued to hold world wide attention by subsequent placer gold discoveries in the Manson Creek and Atlin regions.

BASE METALS FOUND

The development later of profitable base metal properties turned attention from gold. The drop in the value placed upon such metals by world distributors has had the natural effect of again concentrating interest in the finding and the exploitation of gold resources whether in placer or in lode. Hence the remarkable increase in the number of prospectors who went into the hills early last year and continued their search, most of them, throughout the field system, and as a consequence also the many new gold placer discoveries, and lode gold properties, which have been taken up and now are being exploited.

The increased output of gold, both placer and lode, is only a slight indication of the activity taking place in searching for and developing gold properties. The total gold output of $4,140,850, as compared with $3,310,886 in 1931, is an increase of twenty-five per cent. It is probable that gold production will continue to increase substantially.

GREAT ACTIVITY

Gold mining holds the spotlight at present and the British Columbia drama is centred in the Bridge River and the Cariboo Districts, with side attractions at other more or less widely separated regions. The mining recorders at Barkerville and at Williams Lake have reported thousands of stakings under the Mineral Act in both the Cariboo and the Quesnel mining divisions. All these locations are for gold. The recorder at Lillooet finds his revenue quadrupled. The country from the forks of the Bridge River far beyond the wonder mine, Pioneer, is staked solid. All these, too, are for gold. With the wealth of the Pioneer and the Bralorne mines becoming more and more evident, with Cariboo Gold Quartz, near Barkerville daily making it clearer that there are economic values in the veins in that section, with new townsites springing up and others promised, is it too much to say that gold mining is going to be an important factor in giving back to optimism the place too long usurped by pessimism?

COAL MINING

The coal industry has been struggling with particularly difficult conditions. Western Canada has large coal reserves. The market has become more restricted each year. The consumption by the United States of British Columbia bituminous coal formerly was quite substantial. It now approximates 50,000 tons. The bunker trade with the Coast collieries at one time was a material asset. It has been cut into heavily by the growing use of fuel oil. The local industrial and domestic market not long ago belonged to the collieries. Fuel oil has become an active and popular competitor for that business. Consequently the collieries have had no easy task to maintain operations when compelled also to contend with depressed economic conditions. That they have been able to continue work on the scale that assures a production for the year of a tonnage somewhat lighter than that of the previous year is to their credit.

IMPROVED PROSPECTS

As for 1933 prospects, there can be no doubt that the search for gold will be pursued vigorously. There can be no question but that placer gold output will increase; also lode gold production.

If base metal prices advance, the industry immediately will feel the favorable reaction, and the improvement will be felt in every class of industry on the Pacific Coast. The Imperial Trade Agreement should help, but to what extent still remains to be seen. What undoubtedly is most important is that there should be an international economic understanding on questions arising out of the Great War in order that trade between the nations may be put upon a stable and more normal basis.

Big Deposits of Hydro-Magnesite Have Been Found

MAGNESITE and hydro-magnesite have been the subject of an investigation by the British Columbia Department of Mines, which reports that British Columbia is amply supplied with reserves of both rock and earthy varieties of magnesite. Some of the deposits are well located for economical operation should suitable markets be developed in the near future.

A deposit of crystaline rock magnesite found near Cranbrook is the most important of the discoveries to date.

Barkerville as It Appears Today

Barkerville, a Name to Conjour With in the Mining World, Has Fallen Into Decay During the Past Years. Today It Springs to New Activity With the Advent of Another Mining Boom That Bids Fair to Far Surpass the Golden Era of the Last Century

Known Gold Ledges Of Big Bend Left Open in Nineties

Old Report Discloses Rich Field Unrecorded Due to Transportation Difficulties—Prospectors Refused to Record Until Country Was Opened

CARIBOO is not the only section of British Columbia where lode gold deposits were located and left unrecorded by reason of lack of transportation. The Big Bend country on the Columbia River suffered in the same way. This was pointed out as late as 1893 by James M. Kellie in the Minister of Mines' Report for that year. The term "as late as 1893" is used advisedly, as it shows a condition existing half a dozen years after railway transportation was completed.

HIGH FREIGHTS

"Want of cheap transportation and the enormous expense entailed in getting in supplies has to all intents and purposes checked mining ventures in the Big Bend," stated Mr. Kellie. "Twenty-seven cents per pound for packing in hydraulic machinery, and ten cents per pound for packing in provisions, is too costly for ordinary mining purposes. No prospector can stand such a heavy drain on his limited finances, and no mining company would invest its capital under such extremely adverse circumstances. . .

"From personal observations last Summer, I am deeply impressed with the thought that the Big Bend is destined to become the great gold-producing district of West Kootenay. The formation of the Big Bend is perfect for gold-producing ores, granite, slate, schists and porphyry.

LEFT UNRECORDED

"Many promising ledges have been discovered, which are being kept dark, as the prospectors know, unless a cheaper mode of communication can be had than heretofore, it would be folly to record them."

At that time the Big Bend prospectors were hoping that a road would be constructed that would open up the Big Bend.

DID NOT ASK ASSISTANCE

Pioneers of Kootenays Assisted in Development of New Mining Camps

In sharp contrast to the many demands made on Governments of today to undertake public works was the pioneer spirit and enterprises of British Columbia's earlier mining regions. This was particularly evidenced in the Kootenays at the time that the rich mines of Slocan were first located.

It was about 1890 that John L. Seaton and Eli Carpenter located the Payne mine that drew attention to the district. Soon there was a rush to the Slocan, and the town of El Dorado, since renamed New Denver, was started. It was difficult to get supplies into the Slocan.

BUILT TRAILS

Business men of Nelson, within a month of the first discovery, combined and started a trail, and within thirty days had twenty-five miles completed from the Columbia and Kootenay Railway to a point where goods could be put on boats for transportation to the mouth of the Carpenter Creek. A trail was also constructed from El Dorado to Carpenter Creek. Later, when Government assistance was not forthcoming for the construction of a road from Kaslo to the mines, enterprising citizens again displayed their public spirit and had a wagon road built.

Such was the spirit of earlier times, and men of character and determination of the pioneers were responsible for the opening up of rich districts of the province.

PIONEER HAS FINE REPORT

Report on Bridge River Property Shows Fine Position of Property

Fifth annual report of Pioneer Gold Mines of B.C., which has pioneered lode gold mining operations in the Bridge River area of British Columbia, shows a net profit of $453,297 in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1933, as against dividend requirements of $315,315. This is equivalent to 26 cents per share on the 1,751,750 $1 par value shares outstanding, and compares with earnings of $207,687, or 12 cents per share in the previous fiscal year.

A reserve of $297,926 was made for depreciation and depletion, as compared with $128,793 in the previous year. These reserves not representing any cash outlay increase the liquid assets of the company to $527,286, as compared with $23,141 in the previous year.

MILL ENLARGED

In November last the initial milling unit of 100 tons daily capacity was boosted by a 200-ton addition, making the average tonnage treated throughout the fiscal year 171, as compared with 102 in the previous year.

The total development work completed in the last fiscal year was 7,891 ft., as compared with 3,650 ft. in the previous year. The No. 3 shaft was deepened to the fourteenth level or the 1,625 ft. horizon and all levels from the tenth to the fourteenth connected with the main vein. Altogether some 4,072 ft. of lateral work was done on these lower levels, with the tenth receiving about one-half the amount. David Sloan, managing director of the company, reports the ore from these lower developments as being considerably lower in grade than the average ore treated, but adds that could be expected from that portion of the mine. Developments on the upper levels were reported as being gratifying, with the ninth level showing 578 feet of ore of average grade and width.

GREATER RESERVES

In the annual report for the year ending March 31, 1931, the ore reserves reported above the 1,000 ft. level were valued at $5,000,000. Very little development was possible in this area until the completion of the No. 3 shaft about June, 1932, and since that time more ore has been developed than has been mined in the past two years.

International conscience is the still small voice that tells a country when another country is the stronger.

Sandon Boulder Paid Handsomely

When the Slocan Star—a very rich mine—was located near Sandon in 1891, Jack Cockle, a prospector poking about at the foot of the hill, found a big boulder. He staked it. It weighed about sixty-five tons, and from it a trifle of 130 ounces of silver per ton was secured or about 7,450 ounces. The balance of the rock assayed between sixty and seventy per cent lead.

SILVER ISSUE IS IMPORTED HERE

Mining Interests in British Columbia Anxiously Await Action at London

British Columbia is more interested in the outcome of the discussions to be held in London during the World Economic Conference than are many other parts of the world, for this province is a leading producer of silver. The rich silver veins of West Kootenay and the Slocan district will again come into prominence with the increased demand for silver. On two occasions Captain James Fitzsimmons, M.P.P. for Kaslo-Slocan, and Col. Fred Lister, M.P.P. for Creston, have brought the subject before the Legislature. As a result of their efforts and those of other Interior members British Columbia's Legislature went definitely on record as requesting Canada to support remonetization of silver at the forthcoming Monetary Conference.

Experts Predict Golden Era for Mining Industry

Gold Is More in Demand Than Ever Before—Deposits in B.C. Hardly Touched — Development of Mining Industry Will Have Direct Effect on Manufacturers and Tradesmen

SINCE the early days of 1858, when British Columbia yielded the first golden harvest, the history and development of the province has been closely knit with that of mining. Today public attention is focussed again on the natural resources that lie within the boundaries of B.C., and the rich deposits of minerals that are known to be waiting for the man of initiative and enterprise.

Today, as in the dawn of civilization, gold holds the premier position over all other metals. As a basis of all barter and exchange it has ridden the storms of fluctuating values throughout the centuries until now, as never before, experts claim that the solution of economic problems lies in the production of more gold.

There is little doubt that this year will see a new record in the total output of this precious metal. In all probability the five hundred million dollar mark will be passed. Last year the production figure rose to the unprecedented figure of $480,000,000, making gold mining the brightest picture in the industrial world. While silver and base metal prices are distinctly on the mend, yet it is to gold that the province can look to in the immediate future. Though the previous totals produced in B.C. are relatively small when compared with those of Ontario, it must be taken into consideration that the lode gold wealth resources have not been fully exploited.

BRINGS PROSPERITY

Apart from the actual product of the mines in B.C., it must be remembered that the prosperity of the province will be added to through the creation of demand for supplies and equipment. Every mine that opens up means men employed, and every man employed has a definite purchasing power. In clothes alone the miner is recognized as the greatest spender among all industries. His work necessitates the best in rough clothes and boots, which the exigencies of his calling give a short life. In the realm of machinery he must buy wisely and often, from hand tools, picks and shovels which are subjected to exceptional wear and tear to the heavy equipment for plant and mill, involving thousands of dollars invested, with a proportionate expense in transportation to the wilds. Thus the manufacturer stands to benefit materially through the development in mining, employing in his turn factory hands and workers.

Here in Victoria, the city from which the early pioneers of the Fraser and the Cariboo sailed in the old Otter, the interest is keen in the overnight revival of the industry. It was mining that gave Victoria the first step up the long ladder that leads from the status of frontier post to that of thriving city. Every indication points to mining as medium through which wealth and prosperity will come flowing back.

SAN JUAN GOLD

Gold has been found in nearly all the streams draining into San Juan Harbor, and in the surrounding country small veins of quartz-bearing gold have been found.

"I'm glad you're so impressed, dear, by these explanations I've been making about banking and economics," remarked the young husband.

"Yes, darling. It seems wonderful that anybody could know as much as you do about money without having any of it."

DEPARTMENT GIVES HELP TO INDUSTRY

Record of Achievement Is Written Into History of Mines Ministry

SEEKS TO ASSIST IN DEVELOPMENT

The record of the Mines Department has been written into mining history. Prospectors have been encouraged by the expenditure of substantial sums each year on necessary roads and trails to mining properties. They have been assisted by competent mining engineers in the field. New blood has been turned into the ranks of our prospectors from schools of instruction conducted by Government engineers. Capital has been given confidence through the widening of legislative powers for the protection of investors against unscrupulous promoters. The department has worked hand in hand with coal mine operators in the effort to stimulate production of our coal mines. In addition to the annual report covering mining activities of all forms throughout the province, there has been issued a variety of special bulletins giving detailed information useful to miners and investors. These bulletins, on subjects ranging from gold to nonmetallics, are available on application to the department.

ORDERED SURVEY

It was in the year 1929, when base metal prices were high, and the base metal industry was flourishing, that the department noted that the placer gold industry needed a tonic. Consequently the Minister ordered a survey of the placer mining possibilities of the province to be made by competent engineers. This, it should be understood, was before there was any indication of the development of the gold complex that has now taken possession of the world. In 1930 a special report containing information on our placer fields was issued. It proved popular; so popular, indeed, that 4,000 copies originally printed were insufficient and they were supplemented by a like number in 1931. At this time the intense interest in gold had become manifest and it was decided to issue a bulletin on the lode gold possibilities of British Columbia. There was a great deal of information scattered through the department's annual reports since 1874 and there was much of interest in recent developments along this line. All this data was assembled and published first in a comprehensive booklet, and finally, but a few months ago, in a supplementary brochure. These have been circulated throughout Canada, the United States, Great Britain and foreign lands. The information they contain without doubt indicates that our province needs only capital to very substantially increase its lode gold output.

NEW PUBLICATION

Special attention is directed to the department's new publication, entitled "Placer Mining in British Columbia." This now is available. It contains a complete summary of the placer mining possibilities of the province. It also gives in simple form a description of gold placer mining methods designed mainly for the guidance of the individual miner.

In addition, there is a summary of the mining laws of the province with which those who are contemplating taking up prospecting this year, or mining in a small way, should be acquainted. Because of the expense incident to the preparation and publication of this data, it has been found necessary to place a nominal charge upon this bulletin of 25c a copy. Those who are interested should not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity of obtaining an authoritative textbook on placer mining conditions, possibilities, methods and the law appurtenant to the same.

MANY ACHIEVEMENTS

Here are some of the achievements of the department by means of recent legislation:

1. The Mineral Survey and Development Act, under which resident mining engineers are employed, giving the Minister wide powers in respect of the advertising of mining companies found to be boosting the sale of stock on misrepresentations. This power has been exercized judiciously, but with marked effect, in the controlling of "wild-cat" companies.

A further amendment has given authority for the conduct of schools of instruction in mining for the benefit of the prospectors. Such schools have been held each year and now are in progress throughout the province.

QUARRY INSPECTION

2. The introduction of an act to regulate the working of quarries. This is of first importance for the reason that it brought some 2,000 workmen hitherto laboring without any special protection within the supervision of the Inspection Branch of the department. Regulations were passed under its authority to safeguard the lives of these men in the class of explosives used, in the care taken in connection with the storage of these explosives, by insistence on none but those qualified being permitted to handle explosives, and by compelling the use of only approved equipment and approved methods in operation. Quarry operators have co-operated whole-heartedly with the department in its efforts to safeguard human life in this hazardous occupation. It may be said in this connection that this statute was a heavy added responsibility to the Inspection Branch of the Department, for the reason that it already had the working conditions of some 6,500 or 7,000 men under its inspection by reason of the terms of the Metalliferous Mines Inspection Act and the Coal Mines Regulation Act.

COAL SALES ACT

3. Passage of the Coal Sales Act, for which the department was responsible, was the direct result of co-operation between the collieries of the province and the department, having as its objective the stimulation of the production and the use of coal in the province. This act, briefly, protects the collieries against the sale of inferior coal under their trade names and protects the consumer in that he is furnished a guarantee that what he asks for will be delivered to him. Inspection under this statute also has placed further work on the mine inspectors of the department. There are some 500 dealers in this province, so that the extent of the work that must be done under this legislation may be appreciated.

PROSPECTOR'S AID

4. Perhaps the most striking achievement of the department was its introduction of provisional free miner's certificates under the Placer Mining Act at the last session. This policy was the outgrowth of the unemployment situation. Its object is to help the healthy and ambitious young manhood of British Columbia, out of work, to go into the hills to prospect for gold. Each applicant is given a free miner's certificate without charge and under its authority is enabled to locate and record and to hold in his name a placer claim. These placer claims are 250 feet long by 1,000 feet wide.

The title the young prospector secures is sound and unassailable as long as he complies with the provisions of the act. Up to date at least 10,000 of these certificates have been issued, and there is no doubt that the encouragement offered has done much to assist in relieving the unemployment situation. Further, many of these young men have been successful, some of them to the extent of making considerable stakes and many to the extent of being able to recover enough gold at least to pay reasonable wages.

NOTABLE FEATURE

By the amendment of 1933 the Minister of Mines has gone a step further in his policy of endeavoring to use British Columbia's placer gold resources to furnish employment. It gives the Lieutenant-Governor - in - Council power to create reserves upon which placer mining training camps may be established. These camps would be maintained, as are those now functioning, for the relief of the unemployed. That is to say, the cost would be divided between the Dominion and the province. There would be three prime requisites in qualifying for entry to these camps. There would be that the applicant is a British subject; that he has had six months residence in the province, and that he is bona fide out of work and lacking the means of sustenance. The mining development of the placer ground upon which the camp is established would be placed in charge of a competent placer miner. Finally, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council is given the power to allow those who prove by their diligence, acquired competency and character that they are worthy of further help, a month's food supply and necessary equipment to permit them to carry on independent prospecting outside the boundaries of the reserve.

MAY BROADEN FIELD

A feature of this statute is that the possibility has been foreseen of the resident mining engineers, who will recommend such reserves as may be created, being unable to find suitable open ground in their districts, and power is provided for entering into an agreement with private holders under the Placer Mining Act for the development, as an unemployment relief measure, of their ground. That is to say, the Minister of Mines will be able, if he considers it advisable, to establish camps on locations legally held, with the consent of the owners.

Naturally the owners, in such circumstances, would expect special treatment as to rentals and assessment work. Consequently the Minister has authority to dispense with these requirements where camps are opened in such localities. He is able also to come to an agreement with the owners in respect of the division of such values as may be recovered. It is felt that there may be lessees under the act who will welcome this opportunity of having their holdings systematically explored under the direction of a technically qualified engineer, because it will be understood that the field officer of the department would supervise in a general sense all mining operations in these camps.

NOT GRUBSTAKING

It is important that it should be recognized that this is not a grubstaking proposition. The impression appears to have been created that the Government, under authority of this legislation, proposes to fully equip both as to food and in other respects any who might wish to prospect. At present the scheme goes no further than has been outlined. Basically it contemplates the establishment of unemployment relief camps on grounds recommended by the resident engineers for purposes of training in placer mining under competent instructors. The provision of a month's food is mentioned in the act, but it should be noted that it goes no further than to say that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may take such action, and if it does it would be only as a reward for merit displayed in work done in the camps.

It will be realized from what has been said that the proposition may be summed up as an effort to give work to those who lack it under present conditions and whom the public, through its Governments, has to maintain. Unquestionably there will be general agreement with the opinion that the men would be better served by being given something to do and an opportunity to learn rather than being kept—no matter how well kept—in idleness and without any personal hope for the future.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Further, it will be clear that the application of this policy depends upon it being carried out as a measure of unemployment relief. In other words, there must be just as full co-operation between the Dominion and Provincial Governments in respect to these placer mining training camps as there is in connection with the ordinary relief camps. Negotiations to this end have been successfully completed, and further announcements in the matter may be expected at an early date.

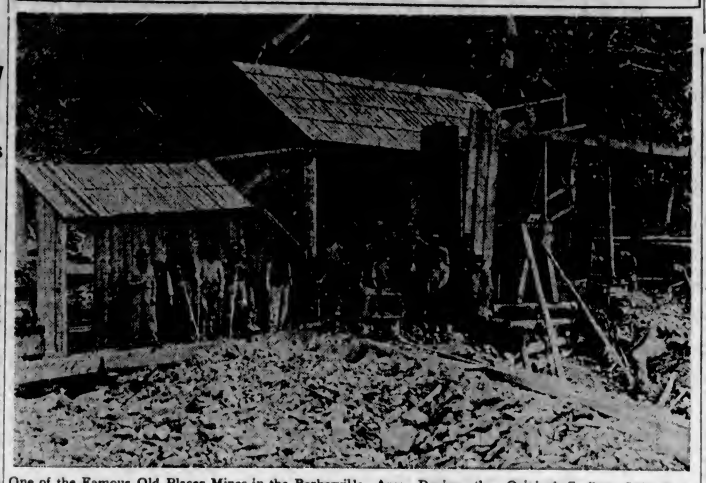

CONSISTENT POLICY

The department's future policy generally will be based on that of the past. It will continue its field engineers for the purpose of giving advice and assistance to prospectors where needed. It will continue the issuance of authoritative information on mining properties for the benefit of mining men locally and capitalists in all parts of the world, keeping abreast with developments and changing conditions. It will continue furnishing the fullest possible protection through its inspection staff of the lives of men employed underground in coal and metal mines. By amendments to mining laws, without interfering with the sound principles underlying them, every encouragement will be given the prospector and miner. Provisional free miner's certificates will continue to be issued entitling the holder to take up a placer claim without charge and to enjoy the yield of the same. This policy was taken advantake of by thousands last year and no doubt the privilege will be exercized by an even greater number this year.

CAPITAL NEEDED

British Columbia's mining industry needs capital. We have the men, but we need capital, and it is this that is being emphasized. At the same time there is no doubt that the placer fields of the province, as well as the lode goldfields, will attract to them thousands of prospectors and miners during the next year and many of them will be from other parts of Canada. They also will attract a great deal of outside capital, so that there can be no question that during the present year a more active and intensive development of existing prospects will be carried on than has been witnessed for many years in this province.

Old Mining Reports Contain Information Of Real Importance

Records of Early Days Indicate Many Rich Properties That Were Abandoned in Pioneer Times That Could Be Profitably Worked Today

ONE of the great assets of present-day mining in British Columbia has been too long overlooked. This is the information contained in the earlier volumes of the Minister of Mines' reports. Properties which today would be considered valuable often were abandoned in pioneer days owing to inaccessibility, with concomitant heavy costs of transportation. Having been abandoned, they have been passed over as ground tested and found unprofitable. The unprofitable character of many claims was due entirely to conditions that have since been rectified—and still the claims remain abandoned.

AMAZING RECORD

It is significant that nearly every large producing mine in British Columbia was temporarily, at least, abandoned. The history of the Premier is well known; the Pioneer was worked years ago, so was the Bralorne. The Britannia mine was closed as late as 1911, and had it not been for the faith of Grant B. Schley, who thought that a mine could be developed, it too would have been totally abandoned. It is the same with other producing properties of today. Cariboo Gold Quartz is still another revived mine.

So it is that there are many—very many—prospects of pioneer days that gave great promise were worked for a time and then closed. Often this was due to failure to interest sufficient capital in the enterprise to finance installation of machinery and continue development.

To mining men who will take the time and trouble to search through the yellowed pages of the mining reports from 1874 to the present day there are many surprises—and possibly rich prizes.

LEECH RIVER GOLD MINING

Precious Metal Apparently Originates in One Mountain Range

An old report on the mineral resources of Vancouver Island by Herbert Carmichael has this to say of the Leech River district:

"A good deal of prospecting has been done on the different branches of the Leech River, and the best results have been obtained from the west and south forks, the few samples received from the north fork proving of little value.

"The country rock of the southern portion of the north fork is slate, and as the stream is followed up to its source the rock becomes mixed, and gradually verges into trap.

"After leaving the slate country on the north fork there is hardly any gold found in the creek, and no ledges have been discovered of any value, but some gold has been found in the west fork, which drains the Jordan Meadows.

COMMON ORIGIN

"Gold is also got at the head waters of the Koksilah, Jordan, and San Juan Rivers, all of which rise is the same range of mountains, and it is not improbable that quartz veins will be met with in this vicinity. Colors have been found in a bed of red gravel above the meadows on Jordan River. A prospect hole was sunk here years ago to bedrock, fifteen feet below the surface, but after going through the red gravel no more gold was found, the bedrock proving quite clean. All the gold in the creeks of this district is of a coarse character, and when the ledges are discovered the quartz should prove to be free milling."

SIR JOHN BRODERICK DIES

LONDON, June 3 (AP).—Sir John Joyce Brodrick, ambassador-designate to Argentina, died Friday at the age of fifty-one. Sir John, who had been in the British Government service since 1901, was a former minister to Cuba.

BRIDGE RIVER INVESTIGATED

Prominent Authorities Think That Recent Work May Revolutionize Outlook

Possibilities of the Bridge River district, which has come to the fore this year as British Columbia's most important lode gold producing area, are believed to have been greatly enhanced as a result of the development of a theory that ore, believed previously to be found only in the diorite formation, is also present in the greenstone through which the diorite has intruded.

This contention is supported by the discovery that for several hundred feet east of the fault in Pioneer Mine, chief producer of Bridge River, the vein is walled by greenstone rather than by diorite, which is the nature of the occurrence west of the fault.

Dr. W. E. Cockfield, of the Canadian Geological Survey, Dr. Howard Jones, of the Pioneer staff, and H. H. Yulli, mining engineer of Vancouver, all regard this as a rather revolutionary discovery and likely to extend the life and productivity of the field immeasurably.

COMMANDS INTEREST

Mineralization may not extend more than a comparatively short distance beyond the contact point of the diorite and the greenstone, but the discovery has nevertheless added considerable interest to an area which nearly doubles the belt in Bridge River which in the past has monopolized attention.

In connection with Bralorne, which ranks second only to Pioneer in this field at the present time, a theory exists that the Woodchuck and King veins joined to form the remarkably wide King ore body beyond the fault. The King vein, as developed so far, has run counter to the usual experience in the Bridge River camp of finding values declining as the vein widens.

Recapture Old Thrill

TWO old-timers of the California Gold Rush revive memories as they pan again for the precious metal. Similar scenes in British Columbia have added excitement in the fact that the gold fields of the Cariboo have been barely touched and a real strike may reward the prospector.

Sophisticated Drama Is Capitol Theatre Feature

"Our Betters" Is Clever Adaptation of Story by Somerset Maugham—Constance Bennett Has Lead—"No Other Woman" Added Picture

Betters," starting tomorrow at the Capitol Theatre, is a clever adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham's sophisticated drawing-room drama and a very effective article for the glamorous Constance Bennett. Neither Connie nor her gowns have ever been lovelier, and her histrionic talents disclose a new subtlety, revealing her an actress equal to any role.

Miss Bennett portrays Lady Pearl Grayston, who said good-bye to an American fortune when she turned it over to an English title. Lord Grayston, her husband, promptly squandered her money and lives so much on the Riviera that his wife, if she wants him to attend any of her parties, has to specially invite him. She is provided for by Fenwick, a wealthy vulgarian, who considers it a special privilege to squander his money on the cleverest hostess in England, for there isn't a member of the smart, fast set who isn't eager to attend her affairs—she is the social rage.

Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford and Gwili Andre give a new verve to the eternal triangle with the vitality and realism of their performances in "No Other Woman," the second feature. Anna, played by Irene Dunne, lives in a steel town and hates the furnaces, belching soot, sparks and fumes over everything, even over her soul. Jim Stanley, on the other hand, loves to toil and sweat before those great fires, making steel—work for a strong man. And he is a man and strong! Bickford portrays Jim.

LIVELY COMEDY NOW AT EMPIRE

Sidney Howard Appears in Laugh-Making Film, "It's a King"—Many Amusing Scenes

Sydney Howard, laughter-maker, is now on the screen in a scintillating picture entitled "It's a King," the feature at the Empire Theatre this week, and Jack Raymond has admirably interpreted the fooling provided by Claude Hulbert and Paul England.

The authors, having a complete understanding of Sydney Howard's ability and methods, have provided that popular artist with a whole rack of pegs upon which to hang diverting "business," put over in his own inimitable fashion.

In this story of delightful nonsense, Albert King, an insurance agent, and King Albert, monarch of Helgia, take holidays simultaneously. There is a striking resemblance between the two men. King Albert's departure from his kingdom is inconvenient for the chancellor, as the Chinese and Afghan ambassadors are expected any day. The king has left no word as to his destination, or probable day of return, and the railway officials at the frontier are not to be blamed when they mistake Albert King for King Albert and wire to the capital that the king is returning. The chancellor makes the usual preparations for the reception of his majesty, and when he realizes that the frontier officials have made a mistake, resolves to "carry on" with the premium snatcher as a substitute.

To complicate matters, an organization of "comrades" desires to capture the king and set up a republic. Here are the ingredients for a good mix-up, and Sydney Howard obliges the authors by following their wishes.

Little Bedtime Stories

Mrs. Quack Spies Jerry

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

When you find a friend in trouble
Pass along a word of cheer.
Often it is very helpful
Just to feel a friend is near.

Jerry Muskrat was huddled in a crotch of a tree on the bank of the Big River, as miserable and hopeless a Muskrat as ever lived. He couldn't think of a single thing to be thankful for but then Jerry wasn't in a condition to do much thinking, anyway. Later, perhaps, he would see that he did have something to be thankful for. Of course he did. Things are very bad indeed when there is nothing to be thankful for. Jerry had reason for thankfulness because the old log on which he had been swept down the Laughing Brook to the Big River had caught for just a minute or two in that branch, which was partly under water, and so given him a chance to scramble up it to the crotch where he was now sitting.

Jerry was frightened. The fact is he was too frightened to do any real thinking. He, who all his life had loved the water and felt more at home in it than on dry land, now was afraid of it. He was very much afraid of it. Even in the Laughing Brook, which no longer laughed, but was sullen and angry, it had proved too strong for him, strong swimmer that he is. As for the Big River, the very sight of that made Jerry tremble. It seemed to him as he watched the water rush past carrying logs, trees, and all sorts of things which it had swept away, and covered with great cakes of ice which ground against each other and made the most dreadful noises—it seemed to him that never before had he known the meaning of strength and force.

For a long time Jerry huddled there, just a little brown bunch of fur, before he began to take much notice of things. His stomach made him take notice finally. His stomach demanded that he get something to put in it. Then Jerry began to look about and try to plan some way of getting out of his trouble. It was just about then that a familiar voice greeted him.

"Hello, Jerry Muskrat! What under the sun are you doing here? Why aren't you at home in the Smiling Pool?" it exclaimed.

Jerry looked in the direction from which the voice came. There, swimming in circles, was Mrs. Quack the Mallard Duck. He knew that she must have just come up from the sunny Southland. Jerry grinned. It was a weak, sad little grin.

"There isn't any Smiling Pool," said he sadly. "There is no Laughing Brook and no Green Meadows. There is nothing but water, water water. I believe the whole Great World has turned to water."

"Quack, quack, quack," replied Mrs. Quack cheerfully. "What if it has, Jerry? What if it has? For my part I think it is great."

She raised herself in the water, flapped her wings two or three times and quacked loudly from pure joy. Then she looked at Jerry once more and for the first time seemed to realize that he really was in trouble.

"How did you get away over here by the Big River?" she demanded.

Jerry told her how the water had driven him out of his castle in the bank of the Smiling Pool, how the water had been so swift that he couldn't swim against it, how he had climbed on an old log and had been carried away, and how at last he had managed to climb up where he then was.

"Hello, Jerry Muskrat! What under the sun are you doing here?"

"Whatever is going to become of me now I don't know," he finished mournfully.

"Cheer up, Jerry. Cheer up," replied Mrs. Quack. "I'll have to look about and see what can be done. I guess it's a lucky thing I spied you. You helped me once when I was in trouble and I haven't forgotten it. Now we'll see what can be done."

Musician to Play Here

Miss Marguerite Devlin, Brilliant Pianiste, Who Will Appear at the Empress Hotel in a Recital on the Evening of Friday, June 9.

THREE STARS IN PLAYHOUSE FILM

Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon and Stuart Irwin Have Leads in "The Face in the Sky"

While brilliant photography has come to be accepted as a matter of course in modern motion picture offerings, something out of the ordinary in this regard is promised in the Fox Films' production of "Face in the Sky," coming tomorrow to the Playhouse Theatre.

The camera man on this Spencer Tracy-Marian Nixon-Stuart Erwin feature is Lee Garmes, whose recent winning of the Academy Award for his work on "Shanghai Express" marks him as Hollywood's foremost film photographer.

Proof of Mae Clarke's talents as a versatile actress is offered in a review of her past few talkie performances. In "Waterloo Bridge" she played a tragic girl of the streets; in "Reckless Living" she was a manicuress; in "Three Wise Girls," for Columbia, she was a mannequin; in "Frankenstein" she was the well-bred and charming fiancee of the young medical student, and now in "The Final Edition," the added attraction, she plays a newspaper sob sister. Pat O'Brien appears opposite her.

GIFTED PIANIST WILL PERFORM IN VICTORIA

Miss Marguerite Devlin, whose first recital in Canada will take place at the Empress Hotel on the evening of June 9, has been accorded most favorable recognition by leading musical authorities in Europe, where she has been studying for more than two and a half years.

Recently, Miss Devlin was presented in recital at the Salle Chopin, Paris, on which occasion a large audience was present.

Commenting on her performance, J. Berthet, noted Parisian critic, wrote: "Marguerite Devlin was one of the participators at the interesting concert given at the Salle Chopin. She revealed the most solid and at the same time, the most brilliant of qualities of the pianist, also a musical temperament full of understanding, sensibility and finesse. Marguerite Devlin studied in Brussels under Arthur de Greef, and in Paris at the Ecole Normale de Musique, and is a pupil of Lazare Levy. This young Canadian artiste has a virtuosity full of charm, and plays with great expression, and I predict a brilliant future for her."

Great interest in this young musician's career is being evidenced in Victoria and the advance sale of tickets would seem to indicate that there will be a large audience for her recital.

Will Bring Export Aid To Farmers

OTTAWA, June 3 (CP).—An announcement, putting into effect the sterling stabilization provisions of the budget, will probably be made early next week. It is understood the Cabinet has dealt with the matter and only the final formalities are required.

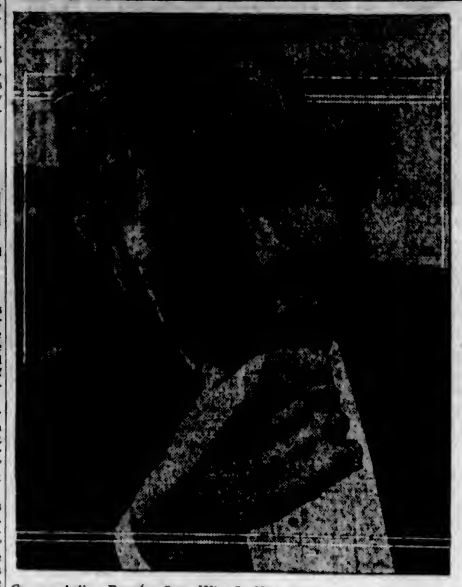

The agricultural stabilization fund proposals contemplated a fund provided by the Dominion Government to reimburse exporters to the British markets for any losses they suffered when the pound was below $4.60 in Canadian currency.

With existing rates of exchange at $4.50, the fund would pay approximately ten cents on every pound sterling.

She: "Do you know where I'd be if I had £10,000?"

He: "On my honeymoon."

In Dominion Attraction

George Arliss, Popular Star, Who Is Now Appearing at the Dominion Theatre in "The Working Man."

George Arliss Stars as Man of "Big" Business

Dominion Theatre Showing Noted English Actor in "The Working Man" — Story Is Fast-Moving and Ideal for Character Acting

"The Working Man," which opened at the Dominion Theatre yesterday, is grand entertainment; a vibrant story with George Arliss at his sparkling best, beautifully cast with a fast tempo that never lags.

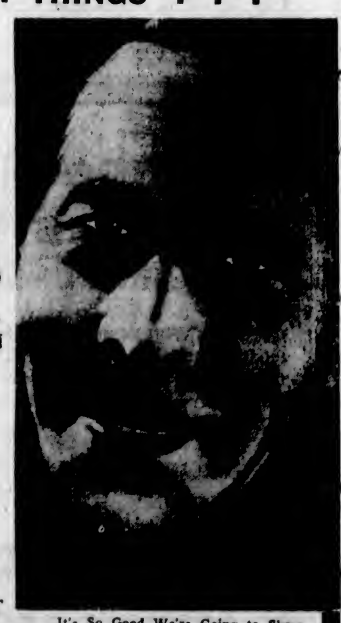

"The Working Man" is easily George Arliss' greatest and most down-to-earth picture, which carries a tremendous appeal for every type of movie fan. Especially interesting it is to see George Arliss after a period of sedate, dignified characterizations, kicking up his heels, wearing wrinkled clothes, and actually appearing barefoot. In "The Working Man," George Arliss portrays with every nuance, an irascible, highly successful business man, as sentimental as he is short-tempered, who starts off on a holiday fishing trip and ends up with a most exciting business adventure.

Behind him, he has left his business in the hands of his nephew, whose insufferable conceit almost drave Arliss, as Reeves, to distraction. While on a fishing trip in Maine, with his life-long crony, Reeves becomes acquainted with the son and daughter of his former bitter business rival. These two children, now orphans, are wild, reckless youths, interested solely in having a good time, without any regard for the business their father had left them. Reeves has himself appointed as their guardian and succeeds in untangling their business affairs, and while doing so, nearly ruins his own company, because he has become his own competitor.

COLUMBIA SHOWS NOTED COMEDIAN

Eddie Cantor Appears in Latest Hit, "The Kid From Spain"—Fine Supporting Cast

"The Kid from Spain," with Eddie Cantor as the pop-eyed matador for laughs and a hundred dark-eyed senoritas for further excitement in a lusty tale of Mexican bull-fighting and love-making, is to be presented by Samuel Goldwyn at the Columbia Theatre, tomorrow.

Nonsense and song, as nervous and bubbling as Eddie himself is, propel a gay romantic fable of love under the southern moon, a story of the dark smiling eyes that give matadors the grace and valor of Spain's noble sport of bull-fighting, with Eddie as the unwilling matador.

"The Kid from Spain" continues Cantor's plans with Samuel Goldwyn of one picture a year. Last year there was "Palmy Days" and the season before "Whoopee."

Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby wrote the songs. With William Anthony McGuire, they co-authored the story. Busby Berkeley created and staged the dances and ensembles, while Leo McCarey directed the story.

MARINE, RAIL and AIR

Schooner's Crew Got Excited Over Aroma From Wrecked Cargo

Mixed With Sea Water Brandy Was Not So Good —Smell Had to Suffice—Fishermen Were Disappointed

The Banks of Newfoundland have always been noted for their great cod fishing. About sixty miles off Cape Race, the Virgin Rocks, one of a great chain of underwater mountains, lift their peaks so dangerously near the surface that the sea breaks over them in heavy weather. Far off to the northeast, the Flemish Cap lifts from the depths, and away west, Guere and St. Peter Banks are located. On the latter two, stated Captain D. J. Butler recently, "I have seen bankers riding out the storm in the depth of Winter, while the spray from our passing ship was quickly turning to ice.

"My short experience of fishing came early in life. At the age of thirteen, my father took me on the Labrador, and on the way to market with our cargo of cod, we left the water-logged old Union, and from the boats saw the last of her.

"We fished Cape Bollard and other banks near the coast during the following year, and standing in from sea one day, the breeze left us. The Gypsy's anchor, with Manila cable attached, was let go off Long Beach, with Cape Race to the eastward, a cape which reaches out into one of the world's greatest shipping lanes. Shoreward, a band of cattle could be seen, a most unusual sight on that desolate coast.

ONLY THE AROMA

"My father sent some of us off to investigate. Drawing near the shore, a strong odor filled the air. We beached the boat close to the recent wreck of a large square-rigger. Masts, yards and rigging lay in a tangled mass, while the broken cargo of molasses in puncheons, and brandy in casks, lay around, giving off fumes so strong it made our fellows sniff in anticipation. It was amusing to see them run from cask to cask and turn away in disgust when it was found sea water had entered the bung-holes and spoiled the contents.

"While ashore, we had a visit from a beach-comber, who told us he was living close by, and that business was good. The stranded ship was the third in a few months. Loading his sled, he left us when hurriedly the tugboat Cabot ran in and anchored near the wreck. Putting out her boats, a number of sailors and policemen began searching the bottom all around the ship. After a time, they landed near us, the captain of the lost ship stating he was looking for a bag of gold that he had left behind in his hurry to get away from his pounding vessel, which had left Spain for the West Indies via Saint John's, Newfoundland. Discharging his cargo there, he had left again for the latter port and was less than 100 miles from his destination.

ONE BIG GRAVE

"That Spanish ship was one of many, both steam and sail, lost in that vicinity. The graves of lost mariners are to be seen today on the lone hillsides thereabout. Just east of Cape Cod, one big grave contains the bodies of the hundreds lost in the Anglo-Saxon.

"The last we saw of the captain and crew of the wrecked ship, they were off, with the policemen, to the beachcomber's house. He may have found the money and been honest enough to give it to the rightful owner. When talking with us, he was dressed in a suit belonging to the captain of the lost ship.

"A breeze springing up, we boarded the Gypsy, and went off-shore to the banks. I have often wondered since if the Spanish captain found his gold. Our beachcomber friend could afford to be generous with so much wreckage at hand, as well as a herd of wild cattle that was grazing there at no cost to him."

Hall of Science at Chicago's Exhibition

Great interest is being manifested in the world's Century of Progress Exposition at the present time. Local transportation agents running into Chicago, and that means Canadian, as well as United States railways, are kept busy answering queries in regard to it.

Apart from the special rates and inducements which all the lines are offering during the next few months, the personally-conducted tour party will be in charge of Rev. Dr. Clem Davies, and which Eric Marshall, of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railway, is organizing, is attracting a large number of prospective travelers.

Providing an opportunity for seeing the many wonderful things that have been perfected during the past century, and indicating the progress which will be made in the next one hundred years, the exhibition should appeal strongly to youth; for, in reality, the exposition is primarily an educational influence. Those who have the time to visit Chicago, and the inclination to acquire knowledge, can learn a lot at the great exhibition.

FISHERMEN UP IN ARMS

Will Make It Uncomfortable for Pilots Who Destroy Their Nets

PORT ALBERNI, June 3.—Pilots from Victoria and Vancouver, who bring ships in the Barkley Sound and Alberni area, are being given warning that in future if they destroy fishermen's nets, that they will be liable to arrest for the wilful destruction of property. This, at least, is the decision of some of the fishermen operating in this area, who have become aroused over the destruction of seventeen nets since the fishing season opened.

"If the pilots would get together and decide what channel they would use, that part of the water could be left open," said one fisherman, "but one pilot will bring in his ship one channel; another, a few hours later, will use a different course, and then another will be several thousand feet away from either of them, so that the fishermen who are all licensed to set their nets in the area are unable to say where to fish.

"The law requires us to leave a certain part of the channel open for shipping, but the pilots think they are entitled to the whole Pacific Ocean. For years we have tried to collect damages from the ships, but the masters refer us to pilots, and the pilots only laugh at us and refer us to the agents, who refuse to even acknowledge our letters.

"We have taken legal advice and whenever a ship runs into our nets and we think that no effort was made to avoid the damage, we are laying a charge of damaging property, and we intend to see it through. If we do not get a conviction the first time, we will keep on laying charges until we either send some one to prison, or make it so uncomfortable that they will use ordinary precaution."

GUILLEMOT WAS FIRST

Sailed by Robin Porter, Dinghy Race Won in Splendid Style

For the first Saturday matinee of the 1933 yachting season, the enthusiastic amateur sailors of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club were favored with sunshine, clear skies and a brisk breeze. Everything a yachtsman could wish for was furnished by the weather man, and it was under those happy auspices that the dinghy class sailed twice around "No. 2 course," to make the first fixture of the club's active season a pleasureable occasion.

The events set for yesterday afternoon had no bearing on any trophies of the club, being more in the nature of a tuning-up gathering. Consequently, all the dinghies were not out, while the stars were only in different stages of readiness for racing, and therefore did not start.

GOOD COMPETITION

However, the skippers taking part in the race for dinghies furnished some good competition before the race ended. It proved Robin Porter's day. Sailing the Guillemot, he took the lead early in the race and maintained it all the way around the course. Five boats competed, the time of the first round being: Guillemot, Robin Porter, 27:56 minutes; Tern, H. Golby, 28:40 minutes; Murrelet, Robert Branson, 29:52 minutes; Solan, H. Halkett, 32:02 minutes, and Helen, Miss Margaret Lindsay, 33:20 minutes. The time crossing the finish line were: Guillemot, 51:05 minutes; Tern, 52:03; Murrelet, 55:16 minutes; Solan, 58:03 minutes, and Helen, 59:33 minutes.

ENTERTAINED AT TEA

Commodore P. A. Lindsay was officer of the day, and kept open house on the flagship Aileen. After the finish of the race, all the competing crews and the gallery were entertained in the clubhouse at tea by Mrs. Lindsay.

Today, the Rainbow Sea Cadets are to be the guests of Commodore Lindsay on the Aileen. The arrangements contemplate a picnic on Chatham Island and a cruise about the strait. Needless to state, when the boys were invited to participate in the outing, there were no refusals.

California Traffic Heavy—All Accommodation on Ruth Taken—Ixion, Winnipeg and President Taft Are Due Here Monday

Sailing for the Orient, the Canadian Pacific liner Ss. Empress of Asia cleared from Rithet Piers at 5:30 o'clock last evening. The Asia had a small passenger list, a number embarking here. The liner will call at Honolulu this voyage.

Among the travelers aboard the liner were Frank A. Abraham, northwest manager of the Valvoline Oil Company, going to Manila; J. L. Ackerman, London; Mrs. C. P. Dawson, Vancouver; Ambrose Cosgrave, nephew of Lady Bessborough, and Miss Lorna P. Leatham and Miss M. K. Lampson, prominent farm organizers of London, who have established well-recognized farms in Australia, proceeding to China.

Others aboard were George N. Kates, who arrived here on the Santa Rosa, yesterday morning from New York, and who is bound for Shanghai; Miss M. E. Robinson, going to Honolulu, and Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Williamson.

With all her accommodation taken, the Pacific Steamship Lines Ss. Ruth Alexander sailed at midnight yesterday for San Francisco and Wilmington. The Ruth arrived alongside Rithet Piers at 10 o'clock from Seattle, to embark Island and Mainland passengers.

GOING SOUTH

Among those boarding the ship here were Miss W. R. Vehloe, Mrs. J. E. Morris, Mrs. J. Corner, Mr. and Mrs. A. Louis Fraser, T. A. Brown, Mrs. P. Houseworth, Mrs. P. B. Steele, Miss L. McQuay, Mrs. G. M. Heale, Miss L. E. Aldridge, Mrs. Grace Matthews, William Matthews, Richard Matthews, Mrs. M. C. James, Miss J. McCallum, Miss E. I. Jones, Miss E. H. Teague, Miss Betty Sewarz, Miss E. Neilson, Mr. and Mrs. Rex Steele, H. Connaughton, Mr. and Mrs. F. Fisher, and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Wright.

From ports in China and Japan, the Blue Funnel liner Ixion is looked for here Monday morning. The Ixion has passengers and general cargo for the port. Completing here, the liner will proceed to Seattle.

According to King Brothers, local shipping agents, the French Line Ss. Winnipeg will dock here Monday from Europe via Panama and California. The Winnipeg will be alongside Ogden Point Piers during her stay here, which will be approximately all day. The Winnipeg has forty-five passengers aboard. The liner will continue to Vancouver on leaving here, about 6 o'clock.

DUE HERE MONDAY

Inbound from the Philippine Islands via China and Japan ports, the American Mail Line Ss. President Taft is due at William Head tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock, according to wireless advices received by W. M. Allan, local representative, yesterday afternoon. The Taft has 450 tons of general cargo for discharge here and a number of passengers will leave the ship here as well. The liner will be twelve hours ahead of her schedule if she docks by 7 o'clock. She will proceed to Seattle after completing here, and will make a quick turn around leaving again for the Orient on Saturday next.

Due at William Head at 10 o'clock tonight, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha motor liner Hikawa Maru will go direct to Vancouver after obtaining pratique.

From California ports, the Kingsley Navigation Company's freighter Ss. Texada will arrive here at midnight tonight, according to King Brothers, agents for the ship.

Warships at Seattle

SEATTLE, June 3 (AP).—Twelve vessels of the scouting force, five cruisers, five destroyers and two tenders arrived in Elliott Bay today for a stay of several weeks. The remainder of the United States scouting fleet was at Bremerton and Tacoma.

FINANCE - COMMERCE - MARKETS

Stock Prices at New York Mart Lower at Close

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP).—Profit-taking cut a swath through the stock market today and most commodities joined the decline.

Shares spent a busy afternoon, with the ticker lagging a quarter hour or so most of the time. A big opening found leaders steady to firm, which meant a fresh assortment of new highs for numerous leaders, but the slight early bulge ran against increased offerings and the market sagged to a heavy closing. Losses of 1 to 3 points were frequent, though Friday's gain was not fully erased. Volume totaled 3,587,720 shares.

Wheat dipped more than 1 cent a bushel and cotton closed 90 cents to $1.30 a bale lower. Bonds, however, continued to plug along, especially in the second grade rail section.

Among the larger losers in the share market were American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, the two United States Steels, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, Sears-Roebuck, American Tobacco "B," American Can, Santa Fe, Louisville & Nashville and Delaware & Hudson, which fell 2 to 3 points. Case dipped 4 and Dupont slightly more. Nash, National Distillers, American Sugar, Pere Marquette and Studebaker successfully combatted the downward trend.

Friday's strong upsurge had, no doubt, caused many traders to feel the market was getting top heavy or that its enthusiasm might be somewhat outstripping business recovery.

News in which Wall Street was interested was largely of cheerful tenor. Freight loadings last week had a percentage rise of 1.9 over a year ago, slightly less than in the previous week, but a gain of about 20,000 cars over a year ago. Volume, incidentally, reached the largest total since December 3, 1932.

Week-end glances toward next week's steel production pointed to a further expansion in mill activity. Automobile output slowed down for the Memorial Day vacation, but is going forward again to an extent that forecasts a June volume equaling or exceeding that of May. With seasonal movements extending beyond the time of their usual peaks, it is regarded as inevitable that markets should be making the most of bullish influences, including recurrent talk of inflationary possibilities.

Despite many minor irregularities, attributed principally to profit-taking, the bond market today fought its way up to another new high level for the year.

The recent trading activity was maintained, with sales totaling $10,697,000 par value. The Associated Press-Standard statistics average for sixty domestic corporate loans advanced one-tenth of a point to 77.6. It was the sixth consecutive session at which this average had recorded a new 1933 top.

The only really weak spot in the market was in the German section, where Reich issues slumped 1 to 5 points, following announcement in Berlin that the Government next week would probably request a suspension of the transfer of payments on the country's foreign debt service. Other foreign bonds were moderately irregular.

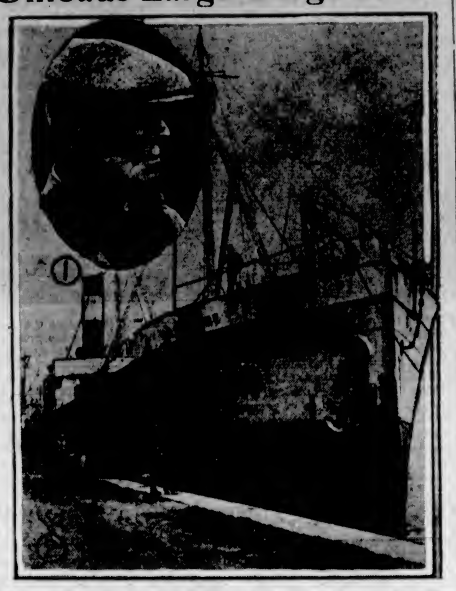

While the domestic utility and industrial categories showed a slightly easier tendency, the rails, as a whole, moved up sufficiently to keep the general market from sagging. Among the better carrier issues, with gains of fractions to around 1 point, were some of Santa Fe, Canadian Pacific, Erie, Illinois Central, International Great Northern, "Soo" Line, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, New Haven, Pennsylvania and Wabash.

Declines of around 1 point were suffered by some of the recently buoyant leaders, including bonds of Postal Telegraph, International Telephone, Western Union, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, Chicago & Northwestern, St. Paul, Rock Rock Island, Colorado & Southern and Baltimore & Ohio.

Unloads Large Cargo of Oil

REGRET that the solitude of the sea is gone was expressed by Capt. E. M. F. Haussen, of Hamburg, Germany, shown in (1) inset, just before skipping the oil tanker Wilhelmine (2) away from the Terminal Warehouse docks, Toronto. Skipper Haussen will spend the Summer plying back and forth between Liverpool and Canada, carrying peanut oil. He just landed 28,000 tons.

DALHOUSIE MINE WORK ADVANCING

Merger With Dundee Syndicate at Bear River Announced—New Claims Purchased

Dalhousie Mining Company, Limited, with extensive holdings in the Bear River Valley, Alice Arm and other parts of the province, has been fully alive to the wonderful possibilities of the important discoveries and developments of the Cariboo and Bridge River districts. The directors have purchased twenty claims adjoining one of the most important of the proven Bridge River properties.

An energetic campaign of work has been outlined. A competent crew has been assembled and, with the engineers, are expected to begin work this week.

A great deal of development work has been done on Bear River claims, and competent engineers have reported favorably on them. Veins varying from four to seven feet in width have yielded $1.80, $3.60, $6.40, $16.00 and $17.80 in gold.

MERGER IS EFFECTED

For some months the company has been negotiating with the Dundee Syndicate, holders of nine claims adjoining the Dalhousie property, and through whose claims the principal gold veins pass, for an amalgamation of the two properties. These negotiations have now been successfully concluded and work on the Bear River properties will be in full swing in the very near future.

About $70,000 has already been expended developing these two properties and the directors are sanguine they have valuable assets in this district, especially so if the price of silver advances. It is understood that ample funds for carrying on the work of the Bear River properties have been waiting for the company in the Old Country, pending the final completion of the amalgamation.

The directors also have under consideration several properties in the Cariboo field and public announcement regarding this may be expected any day.

7½ and 8% MORTGAGES
Now that bank interest is reduced and every possibility of interest on bonds being reduced, would it not be advisable to those wishing to receive a higher yield of interest on their savings to CONSIDER THE FIRST MORTGAGE INVESTMENT?
During our many years of experience in mortgage investments, we realize, as we feel many other investors do, that the first mortgage investment has stood the test during these very difficult and trying times as few other investments have done, and it is with this thought in mind that we wish to lay before the investment public THE FIRST MORTGAGE INVESTMENT.
To those who are desirous of obtaining a higher yield on their savings, consistent with safety, we recommend this investment.
We have very attractive mortgages on hand, and our Mortgage Department is always at your service.

FINANCIAL MART WEEKLY REVIEW

By ALEX FRINGLE
Canadian Press Financial Writer.

TORONTO, June 3.—Timely application of the United States credit inflation needle, aided by business improvement throughout the continent and continuance of the rise of commodity prices, kept stock and bond markets walking on air this week.

Standard statistical averages for the Wall Street board advanced from 74.2 to 80.4, and on the Canadian exchanges five-day volume records for the last three and one-half years were swept into the discard.

The return of copper to 8 cents nad the firming of lead and zinc quotations started a wild scramble for base-metal shares and some sensational price advances were recorded. Smelters jumped $25.50 and Coast Copper more than doubled its price, bounding up from $3.70 to $7.85, a gain of $4.15 for the week.

Pioneer made the longest jump in the gold group, advancing $2.35, while Noranda, producing both gold and copper, went ahead $2.65.

Industrial stocks marked up their best gains since the advance began twelve weeks ago. C.P.R. advanced 2 1-2, Brazilian 1 5-8, Ford, of Canada, 2 1-4, International Nickel $1.50, and Walkers common 3-4.

The market boom has resulted in the sprouting of new brokerage houses all over the country, several having opened in Toronto in the last ten days.

Evidence accumulates of business expansion. C.N.R. gross earnings for the last ten days of May were greater than in the corresponding period of 1932.

Mince plants connected with the building, wearing apparel and beverage industries are working overtime. Trade reports indicate betterment in wholesale and retail business, and bank clearings showed a 25-per-cent increase in April, over the figures for the same month of last year.

$2,000 to $2,500
Wanted, party with above amount available as and when required, for extension of local business, probably not more than $1,500 required at any time. Ample security, and money entirely under lender's own control; money repaid by first charge sinking fund, then 50% of profits on business of extension to lender, estimated at minimum of $50, maximum $200 per month.

Big Vein Cut at Native Sons Mine

Word was received yesterday at the head office of the Native Sons Mines, Limited (N.P.L.), that the crew now working on the property had cut one of the veins running from the Bralorne property into the Native Son ground. This vein measures up to fourteen feet in width, with an average width of eight feet. While assays of this vein had not been completed when word was received, the indications of good values are encouraging.

Futher word from the property is being eagerly awaited by the large number of shareholders in this company, as the Native Son has been one of the first of the new companies to start active development work in a big way this Summer.

CANADIAN DOLLAR AND POUND RATES

NEW YORK, June 3 (CP).—British currencies closed firm on the Foreign Exchange here today, after moving within an extremely narrow price range throughout the short session.

Canadian dollar finished the day at 89 cents, up 1-8 of 1 per cent. The United States premium on Canadian funds was easier at 12.250 per cent.

Pound sterling closed at $4.7-8 for a gain of 3-4 cent.

SILVER PRICES

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP).—Silver futures closed easier; sales, 2,900,000 ounces. July, 35.65; September, 36.25; October, 36.50; December, 37.05; January, 37.26; March, 37.75.

GRAIN MARKET WEEKLY REVIEW

WINNIPEG, June 3 (CP).—An irregular trend, leaning towards weakness, was displayed by wheat futures prices on Winnipeg Grain Exchange during the week ending yesterday. In spite of a gain for the week of 3-4 to 7-8 cent, bullish news was scarce and traders appeared to have lost much of their enthusiasm.

During the ten months May wheat was quoted, it reached a high of 67 5-8 last August 8, and a low of 40 1-2 last December 16. Active futures now are July, October and December. At close of trading yesterday, they stood at 64, 66, 66 1-8 and 67 1-8, respectively.

Foreign importers are only buying wheat as they need it, and in the face of decreasing exports from Australia and the Argentine, Canadian export sales have proved disappointing. The unsold surplus at the close of the present cereal year is expected to be greater by a substantial figure than the carryover in any previous year.

The coarse grain markets, during the week, worked independently of wheat, the flax market being specially spectacular. That grain is now worth about 90 cents more than it was at this time last year.

PRODUCE MARKETS

Following is the markets letter issued yesterday by the Provincial Department of Agriculture:

AT VICTORIA

Weather is warming up a little. The wholesale row is now drawing the bulk of vegetable supplies from local growers. California strawberries are arriving in very poor condition. Interior potatoes have advanced to $25 per ton, while local potatoes are quoted at $22, and reported scarce. Local new potatoes are offered at 7c per pound. Local head lettuce is on the market at 40c to 75c per dozen. Asparagus, good quality, 16c per pound, and spinach from 4 1-2c to 5c. Hothouse tomatoes are quoted at $3.25 per crate for No. 1. Reports of storage holdings in British Columbia show a surprising decrease in potatoes and apples. These commodities have reached the cleaning-up stage.

AT VANCOUVER

Local strawberries are expected on the row Monday, June 5. A crate or two may come in during the week-end. Fancy Winesap apples are coming in from Washington in car lots, three having arrived so far. These apples are quoted at $2.50 per box 100s and 113s. The first car of cantaloupes is due in a few days. Imported head lettuce is off the market as local supplies, of good quality, are available in the desired quantity at $1.25 to $1.50 per crate. Rhubarb prices are again very low. Local spinach is very abundant and the price is down to 4c per pound. Hothouse tomatoes are offered at $3.50 to $3.75 per crate. Egg prices are firm.

Fruit and vegetables imported into Vancouver during week ending May 31, 1933. California: cantaloupes, 114 cases; cabbage, 365 crates; carrots, 1,427 crates; celery, 413 crates; green peas, 1,549 fifty-pound sacks; green beans, sixteen hampers; parsley, eleven crates. Washington: Apples, 2,194 boxes; strawberries, 264 crates.

AT CALGARY

Very small stocks of apples, onions and potatoes are in jobbers' warehouses. Practically all apple supplies are Washington Winesaps, and onions mostly from New Zealand. Five cars of carrots were shipped to Winnipeg during the past week and this has practically cleaned up local supplies. British Columbia potatoes have advanced 10c per 100 lbs. Alberta Gems are still quoted at 75c per 90 lbs., although supplies are almost exhausted. Some complaints are being heard about the quality of British Columbia head lettuce and cauliflower. Weather clear and warm.

AT SEATTLE

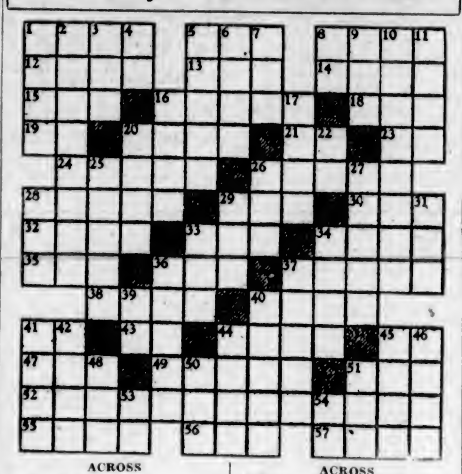

The strawberry market is firm with California supplies moderate and quality poor. The first small shipment of local berries are on the market with demand good at $4.50 per crate. The crop is estimated 60 per cent of last year. Asparagus supplies liberal and market steady. No. 1 Washington asparagus is selling at 3c to 4c per pound and the local product at 4c to 5c. First gooseberries received, with demand light at $1.50 to $1.75 per twenty-four-cup crate. Jumbos at $4.50, Standards $3.75, and Ponys $2.75.

$2625

ON ONE of our best residential streets, close to Christ Church Cathedral, surrounded by good homes; few minutes' walk to the heart of the city. A brief description of the house follows:

GROUND FLOOR—Entrance hall; large living-room with open fireplace; dining-room; kitchen; bedroom and three-piece bathroom.

UPSTAIRS—Three splendid bedrooms and another three-piece bathroom, with built-in bath, etc.

The condition of this home (interior and exterior), leaves nothing to be desired, in fact, we are informed that the owner, not long since, spent close to $2,000 in reconditioning the place from top to bottom.

The house has a splendid appearance from the outside, with its pretty flower garden at the front, and a lovely lawn, with a fine oak tree, at the rear, well-constructed double garage, with cement runways, completes the property, which, at the price now quoted, constitutes one of the best buys offered the Victoria public for some time. The Prince of Wales inherits his grandfather's liking for a good story.

At a luncheon party, recently, he recalled how once, when visiting the quarters of one of the regiments with which he is identified, he was invited to enter the "wet" canteen and sample the beer.

He was told there were two qualities—sold at fourpence and sixpence respectively.

"What's the difference?" asked the Prince.

"Tuppence, sir!" promptly replied the canteen steward in a tone of surprise.

NANAIMO XI WINS FIRST PLAY-DOWN

Up-Islanders Take Opening of Coast League Finals From St. Saviours

VANCOUVER, June 3 (CP).—St. Saviours went down to a 2-0 defeat before Nanaimo City in the first game of the Coast League play-offs for the Con Jones Memorial Trophy, at Con Jones Park today, before a crowd of 1,000 people. The second game will be played in Nanaimo, tomorrow, and a third, if necessary, next Friday night, at Con Jones Park. If Nanaimo wins again, or even draw, tomorrow, they will start the three-game final series against St. Andrews on Friday night.

Today's game was very ragged and St. Saviours never looked like winning. Lawrie played a splendid game on his first appearance for the team left-back, but Heath was lost at centre-half and the forward line never got going. Blewitt kept goal finely, English was a tower of strength at left-back, and Knight the best man on the field. He literally held the Saints in the hollow of his hand, and at the same time attended to the wants of his own forwards.

MR. KHAYYAM COPS DERBY WITH EASE

J. M. Austin's Big Colt Captures $25,000 Race by Three Lengths

By CHARLES DUNKELEY
Associated Press Sports Writer.

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP).—Galloping down the stretch before a world's fair crowd of 30,000, Mr. Khayyam, the big bay colt owned by J. M. Austin, of Old Westburg, Long Island, N.Y., repeated his triumph over Head Play in the $25,000 added American Derby today, winning all by himself.

Struggling three lengths back, came the Preakness winner, Head Play, thoroughly beaten. Fair Rochester, a 40 to 1 shot, finished a fast closing third, with Bamboula, one of the two fillies in the race, sharing in the rich purse by taking fourth place. In the wake of the leaders were Charley O, Gold Bank, Technique and Swinhaven. The original starting field of ten was reduced to eight by withdrawal of Silent Shot and Sun Evoy. By his victory, Mr. Khayyam convincingly demonstrated he is out for a bid for the three-year-old championship of the American turf, and that his triumph over Head Play, at Jamaica, two weeks ago, was a performance of merit. Mr. Khayyam beat Head Play just as easily today as he did in the New York stake.

ENGLISH CRICKET

LONDON, June 3 (CP).—Closing cricket scores in county championship and other first-class matches started today were:

At Lords—Sussex 182 (Allen seven for 41); Middlesex 234 for two (Lee 51, Hendren 93 not out, Nearne 64 not out).

At Leyton — Worcestershire 194 (Martin 50, Bull 59 not out); Essex 117 for one (Cutmore 56 not out).

At Manchester—Yorkshire 287 for five (Mitchell 116 not out, Barber 62); versus Lancashire.

At Birmingham — Derbyshire 226 (Storer 94, Smith 4, Payne five for 38); Warwickshire 63 for three.

At Nottingham—Nottinghamshire 267 (Harris 132, Gover five for 70; Surrey 24 for two.

At Taunton — Gloucestershire 132 (Lyon 53, White four for 34); Somerset 114 for four).

At Northampton — Leicestershire 141 (Dawson 75, Clark seven for 36); Northamptonshire 168 for four (Timms 61 not out).

"If fate had been kinder to me I would have married a $10,000-a-year man," said Mrs. Dubwaite.

"You did marry a $10,000-a-year man," answered Mr. Dubwaite, with dignity. "The fact that I didn't get it is no reflection upon me"

Will Broadcast Science Address

By an all-red telephone route over land and sea, the voice of Lord Rutherford, F.R.S., noted British scientist, will be carried from Cambridge University, in England, to the ballroom of the Hotel Vancouver, on Monday morning, to open the Vancouver sessions of the Pacific Science Congress.

Leaping the Atlantic by radio and hurrying across Canada on the wires of the trans-Canada telephone line, the voice from Cambridge will be heard through loud-speakers in the hotel. A reply by Dr. H. M. Tory, who is presiding over the congress sessions, will be carried back to Lord Rutherford by the same telephone route. Both Lord Rutherford's address and the reply will be broadcast from CRCV.

When Lord Rutherford speaks, his voice will go from Cambridge to London on telephone wires, will make its way out to the radio station at Rugby, and from there will jump to Canada by radio, being picked up by the Canadian Marconi Company's station near Three Rivers, Quebec. It will then come West by telephone wires.

"What is your boy Josh doing just now?"

"I'm worried about that," said Farmer Corntossel.

"Don't you hear from him?"

"Regularly. He's sending so much money home I'm afraid he must be some kind of a racketeer."

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

EARLY HAY FEVER TREATMENT

The hay fever season for the majority of its victims comes toward the latter half of the month of August. A couple of years ago many of these sufferers formed the opinion that they were gradually getting rid of their tendency to develop hay fever. There is no question but that in some cases this is true, for the tendency does gradually become less as years pass. However, the truth of the matter is that the severity of the symptoms depends upon how much pollen from the grass, weeds and other plants is floating about in the air. Research men, who measure this amount, say that it varies greatly from year to year, and when it is less than usual the sufferers have just that much less distress.

What about treatment for hay fever?

As you know, if you can go to certain districts you can remain free from the symptoms, and thus we find whole communities of hay fever victims gathering at these points and spending these weeks in various pastimes. Another method now in use is spending a certain part of the day in rooms or chambers which are built so that no pollen is allowed to enter. Now, going to a place free from pollen, or spending the biggest part of the day in one of these pollen-free chambers, may not be possible in your case; so what are you to do?

Research physicians remind us that "there is less pollen indoors than outdoors, less in the centre of a large city than in the country, less at rest than traveling by motor or train, less at the seaside, less out at sea than on land."

But why be talking about hay fever a couple of months before the season arrives?

The reason is that this is the time to undergo the inoculation treatment to prevent hay fever—six weeks or more before the hay fever season arrives.

Will the inoculations prevent the attack in every case?

No. Only a certain percentage is cured, a certain percentage helped, and a large percentage are not even helped by inoculation. Perhaps you have tried the inoculations once and received no benefit. Sometimes a second or third course of inoculations brings relief.

The treatment, when the attack comes, is the use of adrenalin in some form, by application to eyes and nose, and even injected under the skin.

B. C. HEADS LIST IN PRODUCTION OF THREE BASE METALS

British Columbia leads all Canada in the production of the three metals, silver, lead and zinc. This province produces forty-five per cent of Canada's silver, ninety-seven per cent of the lead and ninety-three per cent of the Dominion's zinc.

Besides having produced approximately $1,300,000,000 in minerals, British Columbia has about 200,000 square miles of unexplored mineral-bearing lands open for prospecting.

MONEY IN THE SOIL FOR FARMER STAGGS

BUDDHA, Ind., June 3 (CP)—John W. Staggs, farmer, was ploughing for corn, but what he ploughed up was $7,061 in old silver dimes, quarters, dollars and half-dollars, some dating back as far as 1818. He's the father of sixteen children and the cash will come in handy.

INSPECTING WAR GRAVES

Col. H. C. Osborne, C.M.G., of Imperial Commission, Is Visitor in City

COL. H. C. OSBORNE, C.M.G.

Colonel H. C. Osborne, C.M.G., secretary-general of the Imperial War Graves' Commission, and the Canadian War Memorials' Commission, arrived in Victoria yesterday on one of his periodical tours of inspection. He has come here from Ottawa, and was joined on his transcontinental trip by his brother, Lieut.-Colonel J. E. Osborne, D.S.O., of Toronto. Both are registered at the Empress Hotel.

Prefacing his remarks by stating that he would renew contacts with local committees in charge of war graves and memorials, Colonel Osborne said:

"The total dead in the British Empire through the Great War was over a million, and many of these, buried in unknown graves, are commemorated in a series of notable monuments, among them being the Canadian War Memorial at Vimy Ridge, which is now nearing completion.

LONG HONOR LIST

"Out of a total of some 19,000 Canadians missing in the war, the names of 11,285 are inscribed on the Vimy Ridge Memorial, while the names of the balance, numbering about 7,500, are perpetuated on the British Memorial Arch at the Menin Gate at Ypres, which was erected to the memory of the British forces as a whole.

"The construction work of the Imperial War Graves' Commission is now practically at an end, but the maintenance of graves, which are continued in more than 15,000 cemeteries and plots over the whole world, is assured," Colonel Osborne stated. "A fund of £5,000,000 has been created, and the interest on this money will be available to perpetuate the memory of these soldiers for all time."

Colonel Osborne's brother, Lieut.-Colonel J. E. Osborne, served with the 15th Battalion, C.E.F., in France, was wounded, received the D.S.O. for gallantry on the field, and was captured and held prisoner in Germany.

Preservation of Forests Required Director Claims

Scientific investigation of Canada's timber resources with a view to their preservation and replenishment is a prime necessity, F. H. Finlayson, director of forestry, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, told the Pacific Science Congress here yesterday. The development and application of methods of forest culture and timber utilization which will assure permanency in wood supplies were matters of vital concern, not only to governments, but to industry at large, Mr. Finlayson said.

Widespread destruction of the Canadian forests had resulted from the belief this country had a superabundance of timber, coupled with an equally erroneous belief that if timber were removed practically all forest land could be put to agricultural use. This had brought about an unprofitable denudation of forests.

The expansion of the lumber industry, coupled with extensive fires had so reduced the timber content and altered the composition of large areas of forests that many had been rendered completely unproductive and would remain so for many decades, if not centuries.

Mr. Finlayson explained how the rapid advances in the use of scientific machinery for processing forest products had accelerated compensation in the way of reforestration.

is merely that the uncollectable capital charges be written off.

"In the adjustment of irrigation loans recommended by Mr. Lougheed, the capital charge against each district is based upon the ability of that district to pay, as that ability has been demonstrated by the amounts actually paid over a period of years. Consideration was given to the value of the crops raised, and what it cost to grow them over a period of years, in no case taking into consideration the growers' private investment in principal and interest.

LARGE SCALE REVERSIONS

"It has been apparent for a long time that some of the districts could never repay the full amount borrowed, and that until a final adjustment of the capital charges on the land was arrived at, there could be no security to the owner. Development as a consequence came to a standstill, and in some cases large areas of land reverted to the Crown through the inability of the grower to pay the charges.

"In order to stabilize the fruit industry of the province, and to keep the fruit-growers on the land, Mr. Lougheed recommends that the Government reduce the capital charges, rather than become possessed of further areas of forfeited land.

"Mr. Lougheed studied the conditions of each district, and set the amounts that he considered ought to be fixed as a capital charge according to the ability of each district to pay, as demonstrated by what they have done in the past. There was no discrimination, and as to the statement that the Government is giving away some $1,495,000, this is not correct.

MEANS FORFEITURE

"Mr. Lougheed points out that, if the present charges are insisted upon, many of the settlers will be compelled to forfeit their holdings and still further loss will be suffered by the Province, because the land forfeited will cease to pay taxes. If, however, the charges are reduced so that the settlers can be assured of a reasonable profit, not only will the Provincial revenue from taxation on the land be maintained, but there is a good possibility of a great proportion of the original loans being recovered.

"Some of the irrigated districts secured funds from other sources than the conservation fund, either by the issue of irrigation bonds or from a parent municipality. It would be impossible for the Government to grant any relief in connection with such loans, because under the terms of the act it can only make reductions on money borrowed from the conservation fund.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE

"Some districts have paid in full; others, with an extension of time, and if permitted temporarily to use the conservation levies for the purpose of reconstructing and repairing their systems, will undoubtedly be able to do so. To sum up, Mr. Lougheed's recommendation has four features:

1. "To scale down all loans to the maximum that can be repaid, as calculated from the amount actually paid over a term of years.
2. "To defer annual repayments for the time being in order to permit certain districts to get their financial structure on a sound basis, and their irrigation systems in good repair.
3. "To close out the conservation fund and to make no further loans.
4. "Each district to create a sinking fund, in order to liquidate its liabilities. This was never previously provided.

"The entire adjustment is a relief measure, and is worked out in accordance with the needs of the parties affected, and their known ability to pay. In no case has any reduction been made on money borrowed since 1929, because it was considered that the districts borrowing, since that date were in a position to pay, and the loans were made on that distinct understanding," the Premier's statement added.

WOODS TO HAVE VALUABLE USES

Chemical Science Making Rapid Advances in Utilization of Forest Products

Chemical science is on the verge of important discoveries in the field of wood utilization as chemical raw material and an almost unlimited field awaits it, Dr. E. C. Sherrard, of Madison, Wis., declared in a paper at the fifth Pacific Congress here yesterday. Progress within the next few years, he said, would be rapid.

Dr. Sherrard, principal chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture laboratory at the University of Wisconsin, stated present utilization is mainly confined to production of cellulose materials. The scope for future research in the more economic employment of all three components of wood—cellulose, lignin and extraneous materials—was practically unlimited and the rewards attractive.

Recent discoveries in the field were numerous. Galactan had been extracted from the Western larch, and when oxidized to muric acid, was well adapted for use in baking powders, soft drinks, effervescent salts and other food preparations. Sugar had been produced from wood, cellulose converted into acetic acid, lactic acid and other commercially important solvents and moulded plastic developed from lignin.

Among numerous problems yet to be solved in the chemistry of wood, was the necessity of developing methods of converting unstable cell-wall material from pulp into useful products, and for similarly employing the uncovered lignin, comprising nearly one-fourth of the original wood. Another was development of an inexpensive method of moulding or forming waterproof containers such as milk bottles or food containers.

"Undoubtedly," Dr. Sherrard said, "the time will come when chemists will succeed in converting the cellulose directly into products, thus eliminating the costly pulping process."

carries no radio and further word of Mattern's progress east from Newfoundland must come from ships at sea until he noses over Ireland.

Only at Clare, regarded as a likely spot for Mattern to strike the coast, were weather conditions fair for flying along the East Atlantic coast line. Elsewhere, there was rain and bad visibility.

TO KEEP WATCH

Irish officials early in the day ordered civic guards along the seaboard to maintain a close watch.

"I'll be back in a week," the San Angelo, Texas, trap drummer turned aviator cried out to a small crowd of well wishers as he climbed into his plane, Century of Progress, and inaugurated the 1933 trans-oceanic flying season.

The ship carried 700 gallons of gasoline—sufficient to remain aloft for twenty-eight hours. Its crusing speed is 150 miles an hour, pushed up to around 170 with fair winds.

The 600-horsepower engine lifted the ship easily on the takeoff. Mattern circled the field and headed to the northeast, as the day broke.

BANDITS SHOOT UP ILLINOIS TOWN AND HOLD UP TWO BANKS

CULLOM, Ill., June 3 (AP).—Eight robbers held up two banks here today, shot and wounded two persons, and escaped with about $2,500 from each bank.

The robbers rode down Main Street in two automobiles, firing right and left. Bullets crashed through windows of a physician's office.

The town was terrorized for ten minutes while the wildly-shooting bandits dashed into the two banks, scooped up all the cash in sight, and then sped out of town, still shooting.

ROTARIANS TO HEAR LECTURER

Robert Watson, Canadian Author, Guest Speaker of Club Thursday

CLUB CALENDAR

MONDAY—Gyro Club luncheon, 12:10 p.m., Empress Hotel.
TUESDAY—Kiwanis Club luncheon, 12:10 p.m., Empress Hotel.
THURSDAY—Rotary Club luncheon, 12:10 p.m., Empress Hotel. Kinsmen Club dinner, 6:15 p.m., Empress Hotel.
FRIDAY—Capital City Commercial Club, 12:30 p.m., Empress Hotel.

Members of the Rotary Club and their wives will hear Robert Watson, F.R.G.S., Canadian author, lecturer and world traveler, at the club's weekly luncheon meeting, on Thursday. The club orchestra will be in attendance.

Lester Patrick, manager of the New York Rangers, and William "Torchy" Peden, Victoria's own six-day bicycle rider, will be the speakers at the Gyro Club luncheon tomorrow. Both will give a few experiences in their respective lines of sport.

PICTURES OF FAIR

A. C. Stickley, of the Northern Pacific Railway, will show a number of pictures showing the preparation of the World's Fair, now in progress at Chicago, at the Kiwanis luncheon on Tuesday. The Kiwanis orchestra will be in attendance.

Resolutions to be presented at the national convention of Kinsmen will be discussed by the local group at its dinner meeting on Thursday night. There will be no meeting of the Business and Professional Women's Club tomorrow night.

TEAM MATCH CARDED AT UPLANDS COURSE SATURDAY AFTERNOON

The annual president's versus captain's team match will be played at the Uplands Golf Club next Saturday. Entries will close with the secretary at 5 o'clock Thursday, when the draw will be made.

GIVES TALK ON ISLAND HISTORY

Courtenay High School Principal Interests Comox Valley Trustees —Committees Appointed

COURTENAY, June 3.—At the Comox Valley School Trustees' Association on Wednesday evening preparations were made for the British Columbia School Trustees' Convention here in September.

Committees appointed are: Entertainment, Mrs. M. C. Christie, W. S. Hunter, A. J. Edwards, and E. F. Thomas; convention hall committee, P. L. Anderton and J. W. McKenzie. Mrs. Anne Carwithen and Mr. Anderton will be the special dance committee. These committees will report to a meeting to be held next month.

During the evening A. H. Taylor, M.A., principal of the Courtenay High School, gave an interesting talk on the early history of Vancouver Island. Commencing as far back as 1803, he showed how the authorities were concerned about the scarcity of white wives for the pioneer gold seekers, and consequently sixty girls were sent out from the Old Land. The population of Victoria turned out to meet them and most of them went North on a steamer with about 300 gold miners.

The E. & N. Railway was really, he said, the result of Vancouver Island's anxiety to have a railway, and it was constructed as a condition of Federation.

The discovery of the Island's coalfields was an interesting item. An Indian from the Nanaimo district needing repairs to his musket, took canoe to Victoria, where there was a blacksmith. Keenly interested in iron working, the Indian watched the operation of repair at the smithy's forge, remarking that he knew where there is black rock that burns. This information was conveyed to the right quarters, and the native was promised free repairs to his rifle if he would produce a sample of the black rock. Some months later he arrived back with about 200 pounds in the bottom of his canoe.

Building the railway was responsible for the Oriental population of the province, owing to the large importation of Chinese laborers, totalling some 6,500. The city of Victoria was founded in 1843 and two colonies were formed, viz., the Colony of Vancouver Island and the Colony of the Mainland of B.C., with two capitals, one at Victoria and the other at New Westminster. The transcontinental railway was the making of Vancouver in the year 1886, which was also the date of the disastrous fire.

S.O.S. Club Will Hold Silver Tea

The members of the S.O.S. Club, Queen City Chapter, No. 5, Order of Eastern Star, are completing arrangements for a silver tea, to be held on Saturday, at the home of the Misses M. and N. Sims, 1144 Goodwin Street, Oak Bay. There will be a musical programme, under the direction of Miss Merle North. Members and friends are cordially invited to the tea, which is in aid of the flower fund.

James Bay Choir Presents Concert

The talented artists who gave their services were: Misses Evelyn Watson, Estelle McDougal, Celia Lewis, Robinson N. Scowcroft and Mrs. C. Wade; Messrs. J. Oakman, F. L. Tupman, J. W. Buckler, G. Shaw, J. Townsend, S. Cheverall, D. W. Frampton, C. Wade, G. Margison, I. Piper and Ian Duncan. After the programme, the ladies of the choir served a supper for the artists, the color scheme of the tables being carried out in shades of green and yellow.

Esquimalt Fete

The Esquimalt Community Club will hold a garden fete and bazaar on Wednesday, commencing at 2:30 o'clock at "Trafalgar House," 649 Admirals Road. This will be opened by Dr. A. G. Price, and many novel attractions have been arranged. An orchestra will be in attendance.

Before Columbus Came

By B. A. McKELVIE

TEN centuries before Christopher Columbus sailed across the Atlantic to win immortality, America was discovered and reported upon. The discoverers made contributions to a civilization that was decadent when Columbus sighted land in 1492.

Such is the record preserved in Chinese history.

Arguments waged for nearly a century over the identity of the land that had been discovered. Historians of the nineteenth century and the late years of the eighteenth century disputed over the matter. This controversy culminated with the publication of a stupendous and learned volume on the subject by Edward P. Vining in 1885. Since that time but little has been contributed to the discussion, which is unfortunate.

Mr. Vining established his case well. He proved, fairly conclusively, that the land of Fusang reported upon by a Buddhist priest named Hoei-Shin was that portion of the West coast of America now known as Mexico. His examination of the material available, his comparison of the ancient customs of the natives with the statements of the Buddhist priest, and his careful and unbiased scrutiny of all previous criticism of the location of Fusang was most workmanlike and thorough. It may be assumed that Mr. Vining was correct in his deductions as to the land of Fusang.

Civilization Evidenced

IT is unfortunate, however, that his volume, "An Inglorious Columbus," was published before all the available material in support of his hypothesis was collected from this more northerly portion of the western coast. There are cultural evidences among the British Columbia native tribes that point to the existence of a higher social order and better civilization existing long before the arrival of Captain James Cook. These evidences—meagre though they may be—not only find corroboration in the recorded antiquities of Mexico, but give support to the Chinese records concerning Hoei-Shin and other Buddhist shamans.

Accepting Vining's theory of Mexico being Fusang, then the coast of British Columbia was known fourteen hundred years ago as the land of Ta Han—or Great China.

It would appear from the ancient writings of China that Buddhist priests set out on a voyage to the East about the middle of the fifth century. They went by way of the Aleutian Islands, Alaska, down the coast of British Columbia and United States to settle eventually in Mexico and Yucatan. They taught the doctrines of Buddha and instructed the natives they encountered in many arts. In 499 one of these priests, by the name of Hoei-Shin, arrived back in China. His story was concerned chiefly with the country of Fusang. Inasmuch, however, as it is compressed into a small space and was written by an official of the Chinese court, it is very likely that it suffered as a result, and that customs upon which he commented verbally as being those of more northerly lands are attributed to the land of Fusang.

Chinese Records

NOT only is there written history of Fusang, as reported on the authority of Hoei-Shin, but there are other references in Chinese archives and literature to this Coast, and particularly to the country of "Marked Bodies" and Ta Han. These will be given.

It should be borne in mind, however, that there is considerable difficulty in translating into English the characters of China. This will be evidenced.

One record says:

"In the year A.D. 508, in the reign of Wu-ti, of the Liang dynasty, a man from Tsin-ngan was crossing the sea when he was caught in a storm and driven to a certain island. On going ashore, he found it inhabited.

"The women were like those in China, but their speech was unintelligible. The men had human bodies, but their heads were like those of dogs and their voices resembled the barking of dogs.

"Their food was small pulse, their garments were like cotton. The walls of their houses were of beaten earth, round in shape and the entrance like that to a den."

The foregoing account might, at first read, appear to be the product of a wild imagination. Particularly the reference to "dog's heads" suggests the incredulous. Examination of the Chinese character "keu" which is used to denote "dog" shows, however, that it is also used to describe "contemptible." Reading the reference, then, as having "human (or manly) bodies, but their heads were contemptible (or ugly)" an entirely different meaning, and one easily reconcilable with facts may be obtained. The quality of speech, described as being like the barking of dogs, is quite understandable to any person who has heard the harsh guttural explosions of excited natives.

"Their food was small pulse." This requires no comment, as the variety of vegetable foods utilized by Coast Indians in their former state are well known.

Primitive Weaving

"THEIR garments were like cotton." There are pioneers of British Columbia who can recall the white woolly dogs, now extinct, that were reared by natives on the Coast, and the manner in which the Indian women used the wool to weave garments. Paul Kane, the artist who visited Fort Victoria in the forties of the last century, commented upon them, and pictured the dogs. The Chilkat blankets of Northern British Columbia, once a common article of barter, are scarve today, but are still obtainable at a high price. These were made from the wool of the mountain goat.

The houses of beaten earth, "round in shape and the entrance like that of a den" forms an excellent description of the habitations known to pioneers of this province as "keekwillies." Sir Francis Drake commented upon this type of habitation when he visited this Coast. It is possible that some, in a fairly good state of preservation, may yet be found in the Interior. In any event they were in use long after white settlement was established.

Again, some types of Haida dwellings, still to be observed on Queen Charlotte Islands, suggest constructive development of the original subterranean house. In these Haida structures the centre of the dwelling is excavated, in one or mere terraces. In the keelwillie proper, a circular hole was dug. It was roofed over with poles, slanting towards the centre, the apex being left open as a smoke hole and doorway. The roof poles were thatched with branches, sods and earth.

The reference in the Chinese account can refer to a keekwillie only.

Land of Wan Shan

NOW let us read another Chinese record. It refers to "Wan Shan," or the country of "Marked Bodies."

"During the Liang dynasty (A.D. 502-556) it was reported that about 7,000 li to the northeast of Japan there was a country whose inhabitants had marks on their foreheads. Those whose marks were large and straight belonged to the honorable class, while the lower sort of people had small crooked marks. It is a custom among this people to collect a great variety of things of a very poor sort to amuse themselves. Those who travel or peddle do not carry eny provision with them.

"They have houses of various kinds, but no walled towns. The palace of the king is adorned with gold, silver and jewels in a sumptuous manner. The buildings are surrounded with a moat, over ten feet broad. When it is filled with quicksilver the water is then regarded in the markets as a precious rarity."

The Northern British Columbia and Alaskan natives had distinguishing marks on their faces. Not only was tatooing known, but faces were painted, and certain markings of facial decorations were reserved for the chiefs and nobles.

In reference to the gold ornamentation of the king's house, the elasticity of the Chinese character for gold, "kin," must be regarded. In addition to denoting the precious metal, it also signifies "gilded, yellow and costly or precious." Similarly, "yin" may be used to translate as "silver, money, wealth." It is significant that yellow was an imperial color in China, and that reference may be to the use of this tint, for the aborigines made use of yellow dye, manufacturing it from boiling raw copper with other substances and fluids. Copper was known to the natives and utilized by them, being obtained in its native form. Reference to jewels is quite acceptable to those who are familiar with the artistic manner in which the natives ornamented various objects with mother of pearl.

Water-Silver Moat

IT has been upon the reference to the moat filled with quickaliver that there has been dispute. Translated literally, the Chinese characters are "Yin," silver, and "shui," the character for water, therefore water-silver. The same character, "shui," also means "fluid," clear, a stream, a trip from one place to another, inundation, trivial, common, gentle, a lowland, to wet or to soak. Argument was advanced, in the days when the discussion raged, and to the improbability of a moat ten feet wide being filled with quicksilver. It would appear rather difficult to accept. Any person who has been in an old-fashioned Indian settlement during the oolachen run, however, will have no difficulty in interpreting "water-silver" as having reference to conditions found there.

When the small silvery oolachens—or candle fish— were running in millions, the Indians filled broad trenches, or enclosed spaces, with them to a depth of a foot or more. They were permitted to remain so until putrefaction set in, liberating the oil. They were then lifted into an old canoe or wooden vat, which was partially filled with water. Hot stones were dropped into the mass, and the heat completed the separation of the oil, which came to the surface, where it was skimmed off when cool. This grease was one of the greatest articles of commerce, and was much prized, particularly by tribes in the regions back from the Coast. It would appear that oolachens were indeed the water-silver of the Chinese record, for, as the old account states, the water (or fluid) was indeed "regarded in the markets as a precious rarity."

Country of Ta Han

SO much for the country of Wan Shan. Now, as to the country of Ta Han:

"It was reported, during the Liang dynasty, that this kingdom lay more than 5,000 li east of Wan Shan. The inhabitants have no soldiers or weapons, and never carry on war. Their manners and customs are the same as those of Wan Shan, but their speech differs."

Therefore that which applies to the country of the "Marked Bodies" is applicable to Ta Han. Presumably they, too, painted their faces.

There were no organized bodies of soldiery among the Indians, and the reference to lack of weapons indubitably means those common to the higher civilization of China, such as swords and implements of warfare, as distinguished from those of the chase.

Distances given in Chinese li, it will be noted, are approximate. Further there exists, among authorities, a considerable difference of opinion as to the length of the Chinese li in the period dealt with in these records. It has been variously estimated at from 1,825.55 to 2,028.39 English feet. Whatever the distance might be, it is certain that it was not professed to be exact. What does appear on the record is that the adventurers traveled 7,000 li to the land of Wan Shan, and a further 5,000 li to Ta Han, Wan Shan being in the ratio as seven is to twelve of the total distance from Japan, as set down in the accounts cited.

The account of Fusang is more extended. The name of the Buddhist priest is spelled variously, according to the idea of the translator, as Hwui-Shan, Hwui-Shin and Hoei-Shin. The latter is used for the purposes of this article.

Story of Fusang

"IN the first year of the reign of Yung-yuen of the Emperor Ting Hsuh-hau, of the Tai dynasty (A.D. 499), a Shaman priest named Hoei-Shin arrived at King-chau from the Kingdom of Fusang. He related as follows:

"Fusang lies east of the Kingdom of Ta Han more than twenty thousand li; it is also east of the Middle Kingdom (China). It produces many fusang trees, from which it derives its name. The leaves of the fusang resemble those of the tung tree. It sprouts forth like the bamboo and the people eat the shoots. Its fruit resembles the pear, but is red; the bark is spun into cloth for dresses and woven into brocade. The houses are made of planks. There are no walled cities with gates. They use characters and writing, making paper from the bark of the fusang.

"There are no mailed soldiers, for they do not carry on war. The law of the land prescribes a southern and a northern prison. Criminals convicted of light crimes are put into the former, and those guilty of grievous offences into the latter. Criminals, when pardoned, are let out of the southern prison; but those in the northern prison are not pardoned. Prisoners in the latter marry. Their boys become slaves when eight years old and the girls slaves when nine years old. Convicted criminals are not allowed to leave their prison while alive.

"When a nobleman (or an official) has been convicted of crime, the great assembly of the nation meets and places the criminal in a hollow; they set a feast, with wine, before him, and then take leave of him. If the sentence is a capital one, at the time they separate they surround his body with ashes. For crimes of the first grade, the sentence involves only the person of the culprit; for the second, it reaches the children and grandchildren, while the third extreme extends to the seventh generation.

Lived in Splendor

"THE king of the country is termed yueh-hi; the highest rank of nobles, is called tui-lu; the next little tui-lu, and the lowest, no-chs-sha. When the king goes abroad he is preceded and followed by drummers and trumpeters. The color of his robes varies with the years in the cycle containing the ten stems. It is azure in the first two years; in the second two years it is red; it is yellow in the third, white in the fourth, and black in the last two years. There are oxen with long horns, so long that they will hold things—the biggest as much as five pecks. Vehicles are drawn by oxen, horses and deer, for the people of that land rear deer just as

WHEN RAILROADS WERE YOUNG

So old that important details of her history are lost in antiquity but restored to much of the splendor of her youth, the oldest surviving member of railway construction locomotives in the Northwest and the first logging engine used in British Columbia is preserved as a historical relic in the exhibition grounds at Hastings Park, Vancouver. Variously named during the course of an intensely active career that extended over more than a half century, she is "Old Curly" to this generation and others to come.

To old-time railwaymen she is an object of technical interest; to other pioneers she recalls the stirring days of early development in British Columbia; to those who lived not in her days of hectic expansion, she is a source of wonder and inspiration to delve into the history of those times.

Just where Old Curly was born is a matter of dispute. Some say she first saw the light of day in the early '70's, that she helped build railways in the United States, then journeyed to Peru and other South American countries, later to be taken by Count De Lesseps to assist in the brilliant but unsuccessful attempt of the French engineer to put through the Panama Canal in 1878-79. From the canal zone, after several years of idleness, she found her way to the North Pacific Coast.

Built at San Francisco

CLASSED as the 0-4-0 saddle back tank type, Curly has been the cause of research by the Railway Historical Society, and the studies of that organization have resulted in the conclusion that the veteran locomotive was built by the Union Iron Works at San Francisco in 1869 for use on ore trains in Nevada. This belief is held by J. D. Fraser, retired superintendent of the E. & N. Railway, and by W. H. (Billy) Evans and E. E. Austin, retired locomotive engineers of Vancouver.

Curly's last work before becoming a Canadian citizen is believed to have been on the construction of the great sea wall at San Francisco, for at the termination of that work she was purchased by Andrew Onderdonk, manager of D. C. Mills & Co., who had the contract for construction of the western portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In 1881 she came to British Columbia. Known as the Emory and bearing the numeral 3, the tiny wood-burner, squat of frame with compact drive wheels, thundered over the main line of the C.P.R. between Port Moody and Kamloops for the next four years carrying supplies along the railway front.

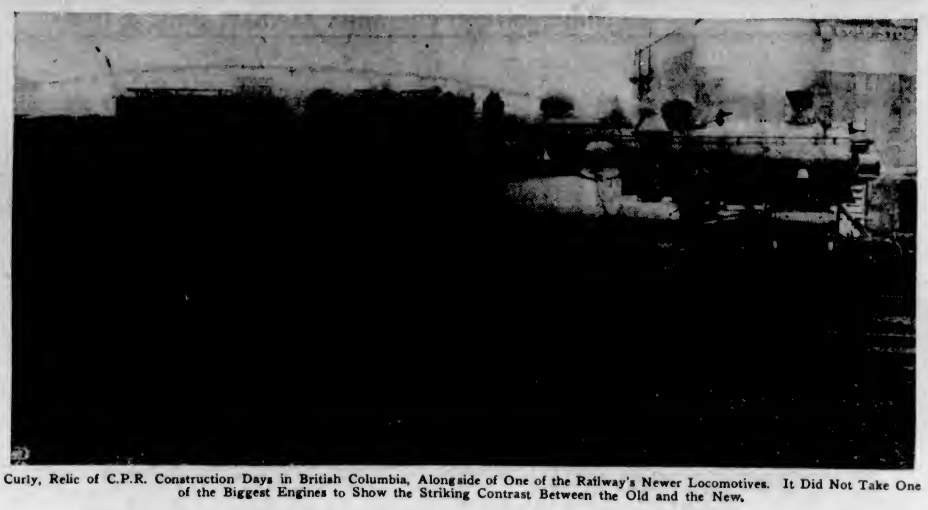

In 1885, after a long period of service, it seemed that her period of usefulness must be done, but Curly rebelled at the thought of retirement and found herself another job.

There being no further use for her on the railway, the construction work having been completed, she was sold to the British Columbia Mills & Trading in 1890 and for years she hauled logging trains. Sol Ramey, who is still in the employ of B.C. Mills, recalls how he assisted in moving the little locomotive from New Westminster to Mud Bay, where she worked with the same zeal and energy as she had with the railways.

A Narrow Escape

OLD age finally claimed the proud iron-horse of bygone days, and Curly, boilers corroded, firebox badly burned out, aged frame creaking in every joint and drive-rods protesting at every turn of the battered wheels, was relegated to the Hastings Mills site on Burrard Inlet. There she remained a forgotten heroine of early development and progress until the Vancouver Harbor Board purchased the mill property. Then she was to disappear if old friends did not come to her aid.

She was offered to the C.P.R. as an historic relic. The railway company, anxiods to preserve and protect the old faithful, accepted.

Curly, Relic of C.P.R. Construction Days in British Columbia, Alongside of One of the Railway's Newer Locomotives. It Did Not Take One of the Biggest Engines to Show the Striking Contrast Between the Old and the New.

Old Curly went into the Vancouver shops where she received the tender ministrations of mechanics for the first time in twenty years. Grime of two decades was sand-blasted, missing parts were replaced and a new coat of paint restored the appearance of her youth. Engineers even put a fire under her boiler, and she responded by sending clouds of black smoke billowing from her funnel-shaped stack.

Two years ago Curly was dedicated to the Vancouver Exhibition Association by C. A. Cotterell, general superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia. Surrounded by a wire fence and bearing a gold-lettered placard proclaiming her venerable deeds, she is one of the show pieces of the exhibition and every year at fair time she draws her quota of admirers from the general public and railway pioneers.

While Curly is a true pioneer of railroading in this province and the oldest survivor of her times, she was not the first locomotive to puff her noisy way through the hills and valleys of British Columbia. Vancouver Island was the home of the first railway engines in Western Canada. In the sixties several small locomotives were purchased in the Old Country by the Nanaimo Coal Company to haul fuel-laden cars. They have long since been scrapped.

They were followed by the Duke and Duchess, small gauge types brought out by the late Mr. Dunsmuir in 1878 and used for hauling coal between East Wellington and Departure Bay. The Duke and Duchess were Baldwins, and two years before they came to the Island they were exhibited at the American Centennial Exhibition in New York.

The Yale, purchased by Mr. Onderdonk from the Virginia & Truckee Railway of Nevada in 1880, was the first wide gauge engine to arrive in British Columbia. She was landed in the Fall of 1880 at Emory, on the Fraser River, and immediately went to work on construction of the line through precipitous rock-bound walls of the Fraser River Canyon. When construction was completed, with most of her companions the Yale went to the Intercolonial Railway, later to be scrapped when her usefulness ended.

Other Historic Locomotives

OLD No. 9 was the first engine to come through the Rocky Mountains, and the first seaboard train from the East was pulled by No. 371 under Engineer Billy Evans, now retired and living at Vancouver. The first train from Port Moody to Yale made the journey on January 24, 1884, pulled by the construction engine No. 5, better known as the Lytton, with E. E. Austin, now retired and living at Vancouver, in charge.

The first Esquimalt & Nanaimo locomotive was No. 1. She was landed at Oyster Bay on July 14, 1885, and put in many years of service before her career was ended. John A. Coburn, first Mayor of Nanaimo and an early employee of the E. & N., coupled the first car to No. 1.

The Railway Historical Society has been gathering data regarding these early engines. A vast amount of material regarding pioneer efforts and successes has been recorded. In this work, J. D. Fraser, retired superintendent of the E. & N., now living in Victoria, has been able to give much assistance. Mr. Fraser served as a telegraph operator and train dispatcher through a large part of the earliest railway construction in this province and naturally is able to provide much information necessary to obtain co-ordination of briefly recorded events.

BEFORE COLUMBUS CAME

the Chinese rear cattle and make cream of their milk. They have red pears which will keep a year without spoiling; water rushes and peaches are common. Iron is not found in the ground, though copper is; they do not prize gold or silver, and trade is conducted without rent, duty or fixed prices.

"In matters of marriage it is the law that the son-in-law must erect a hut before the door of the girl's house and must sprinkle and sweep the place morning and evening for a whole year. If she then does not like him, she bids him depart; but if she is pleased with him, they are married. The bridal ceremonies are for the most part like those of China. A fast of seven days is observed for parents at their death, five for grandparents and three days for brothers, sisters, uncles and aunts. Images to represent their spirits are set up, and before which they worship and pour out libations morning and evening, but they wear no mourning.

Priests Arrive

"THE successor of the king does not attend personally to Government affairs for the first three years. In olden times they knew nothing of the Buddhist religion, but during the reign T-ming, of the Emperor Halo Wu-ti, of the Suhg dynasty (A.D. 458), from Ki-pin five beggar priests went there. They traveled over the kingdom, everywhere making known the laws, canons and images of that faith. Priests of regular ordination were set apart among the natives, and the customs of the country became reformed."

Space will not permit of detailed examination of the statements set forth in the story of Fusang. Vining, in his masterly work, has done so in a most meticulous manner. He finds that in thirty-five points they correspond with conditions pertaining to Mexico. He says in part:

"There exists in Mexico a tradition of Hoei-Shin's visit (Hwui Shan is the spelling used by Vining). This gives his name and title of Hwui Shin, bhikshu, as 'Wi Shi pecocha; tells of the district of the Pacific Coast upon which he landed; describes his complexion, his beard, and his dress; relates the doctrines he preached, mentions the success that he met in his mission, and states the reason for his return to Asia. Traditions also exist of the visit of the party of Buddhist priests mentioned by Hoei-Shin, from whom he seems in some way to have become separated."

Vining, it would appear, associates Hoei-Shin, or some other of these Buddhist shamans, with the legend of the Mexican god Quetzalcoatl.

Mexican Legend

THIS god, according to legend, was a white man, portly of person, broad forehead, large eyes, long black hair, and large round beard. He taught chastity and moderation in all things and universal peace. He came as a stranger, and became not only a spiritual leader, but an instructor in the arts, particularly in the working of metals. After spending many years with the people of Mexico, he left, journeying to the sea coast in company with a number of his disciples. He bade them good-bye. They returned to their homes and he was never seen again.

One legend says that he went over the sea in a boat, or raft, formed of plumed snakes. In any event, mythology associates plumed serpents with Quetzalcoatl as a symbol of his power.

Temple and burial mounds were dedicated to the spirit of Quetzalcoatl in Mexico.

Now, briefly, consider the slight traces of possible connection between Quetzalcoatl and the primitive culture of this Coast.

The first careful analysis of the customs and beliefs of the Indians of the British Columbia Coast was conducted by Don Joseph Mariano Mozino, a scientist attached to the establishment of Nootka in 1792. He reported that the Indians revered a god whom they called "Qua-utz." This god, on occasion, appeared from the sea in a boat of burnished copper accompanied by resplendent youths rowing with copper oars.

He says: "The natives, recognizing the existence of a Greater God, believe equally that ther is another malign deity, the author of wars, sickness and death. They abominate and detest this odious origin of their calamities, at the same time that they venerate and extol the good God that created them. In his worship they fast many days and abstain constantly from . . . pleasures . . . They sing hymns, accompanied by their families, celebrating the goodness of Qua-uts (so they call their Creator) and throw whale grease into the flames and scatter feathers to the wind."

The Indians of the British Columbia Coast have as a superstitious symbol the sisiul, or plumed snake. This serpent—or rather two of them—are usually depicted extending from the face of a man. The true symbolism has never been fully authenticated, but an account given to W. M. Halliday, for more than a quarter of a century Indian agent among the Kwatiutls, was that it depicted the struggle between good and evil for the possession of man.

In any event it is regarded as having magical powers. To see, touch or eat it is unlucky. This recalls the Mexican legend of how an enemy of Quetzalcoatl sought to poison him by feeding him the flesh of the plumed serpent. Under certain conditions the sisiul has powers for good, and in olden times a belt, or girdle, fashioned in the form of the sisiul, was worn about the waist as a protection.

To return to the account of native beliefs given by Mozino. He found that the Nootkans of one hundred and forty years ago believed that through fasting, refraining from gratifying sensual desires, and doing penance, such as scouring themselves with hemlock branches while bathing, they would attain benefits in the future life. These observances were largely confined to the nobility, who were known as "tayes." This word of itself may be the "tui-lu" of the Chinese in defining the native princes. In our own records the "tayes" of the early explorers are now called "tyees." Apart from the similarity of the words, the religious concepts of the Nootkans as reported by Mozino are suggestive of Buddhist and ancient Mexican beliefs.

B.C. Antiquities

THERE are other peculiarities of coastal antiquities that may be linked up with those of Mexico, and incidentally with the story of Hoei-Shin.

One of these is the similarity between the burial mounds of the two countries. It is unfortunate indeed that in the past half century British Columbia has not officially explored the prehistoric past more assiduously. It has been left for casual strangers to do.

In pioneer days James Deans, a resident of British Columbia, did a great deal of valuable work, as did Dr. Newcombe, and in later years his son, W. A. Newcombe, and Prof. Hill-Tout.

Mr. Deans, according to an account given in Bancroft's writings, opened up several mounds on Vancouver Island. In 1871 he cut through the centre of one and found that it was constructed: "First, a circle sixteen feet in diameter was marked out, and the top soil cleared off within the circle; then a basin-shaped hole, six feet in diameter, smaller at the bottom than at the top, was dug in the centre, in which the skull, face down, and the larger unburned bones were placed and covered with six inches of earth. On the layer of earth rested a large flat stone, on which were heaped up loose stones, the heap extended about a foot beyond the circumference of the central hole. Outside of this heap, on the surface, a space of two feet wide, extending round the whole circumference, was sprinkled with ashes, and contained a few bones also. Outside of this space again, large stones, two or three feet long, were set up in the ground like pillars, five feet apart round the circumference, and finally the earth dug from the central hole, or receptable for the bones, was thrown into the outer circle, and gravel and sand added to the whole until the mound was five feet high, having a rounded form. Four smaller mounds, six and ten feet in diameter, were opened in the same group, showing the same mode of construction, but somewhat less order."

Mr. Deans found that occasionally "a piece of quartz sometimes accompanies the bones, but no other relics are found."

In Mexico in the old mounds a small piece of green stone is usually found with the bones, and no other relics.

Opened Ancient Mound

ON the Fraser River, near Haney, Dr. F. H. Underhill, who retired several years ago as medical health officer for Vancouver, about forty years ago was told by Indians that three mounds, grown over by trees, were the burial place of three white princes of prehistoric times. He opened one. He found that the bones reposed beneath a covering of arched masonary.

The Buddhist shamans who were reported to have visited and carried on their spiritual endeavors on the Western Coast of America were not Chinese. The Oriental account says they were from Ki-pin. This place is believed to have been located either in Northern India or in that region.

Having regard to all the similarities, it would appear that Buddhist priests were the first known discoverers of America, and that British Columbia was known a thousand years before Columbus, as the country of Ta Han.

College of Education for British Empire Is Started in London

AN announcement of unusual interest to Canadians, educationists more particularly, has recently come from Great Britain. It is to the effect that the University of London has taken over the London Day Training College for teachers, and is proceeding to build up in connection with it an Imperial Institute of Education, or graduate school of education, especially equipped to encourage the attendance of educationists from all parts of the Empire. In the words of the university's statement of policy its object is "the creation in London of a strongly equipped centre for the continuous discussion and investigation of educational problems that are important to the constituents of the British Commonwealth, and for the training of men and women who are to play parts of more than ordinary importance in the educational systems of the Commonwealth."

"The educational experience of Englishmen, gained through centuries of work at home and in every conceivable situation abroad is, taken as a whole, unique, but its value is from the imperial point of view, largely lost, because there is no institution where it can be focussed and made conscious, no organ through which it can be expressed. For that reason we have been leaving to other nations, particularly to the United States, whose educational experience, though less than ours, is better studied and organized—the task of helping the daughter nations of Britain to do their educational thinking and planning, and of training their leading educational workers."

Two Key Departments

IN addition to courses leading to the M.A. and Ph.D. in education, the institute will provide programmes for those who have a more limited time to spend in London. Two key departments of study will be "Education in the British Commonwealth" and Colonial Education," in connection with which there will be lecturers from the Dominions and Colonies respectively; and wherein students from one part of the Empire will have an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the problems and experience of those in other parts.

There will also be a department of Comparative Educational Administration in which overseas students will be enabled to study the educational systems of the British Isles and of the Continent, and at the same time, presumably, to take advantage of organized tours to Continental countries such as the twenty-one-day tour in April to the U.S.S.R. arranged in the last two years by the Society for Cultural Relations with the U.S.S.R. There will also be departments of educational enquiries and research, child development, etc. The nucleus of students from which the Imperial aspect of the institute is expected to develop was represented last year by four students from India, eight from the Colonies and six from the Dominions.

Aid to Teachers

IN regard to assisting teachers and others to study at the institute, it is pointed out that the Colonial governments have already begun to send selected educational officers to take a year's course, and have assisted missionary bodies to send some of their senior teachers. The hope is expressed that authorities in the several Dominions may see fit to adopt a similar policy. It is further expected that one or two of the great corporations whose funds are devoted to educational purposes may be able to offer scholarships to overseas students who wish to take courses at the institute.

In support of the establishment of such a centre, the university's statement says it had been advocated and its main functions discussed by Sir Percy Nunn from the home point of view, and from the oversea point of view by Professor P. Sandiford, of the University of Toronto, by Professor F. Clark, formerly of the University of Capetown, now of McGill, and by others. At meetings of the British Commonwealth Educational Conference, and in the educational section of the British Association it had been approved by vice-chancellors of the Capetown, New Zealand, and Alberta Universities, as well as by some authorities such as Mr. Ormsby, Lord Eustace Percy, Sir Charles Grant Robertson and Sir Michael Sadler.

Canadians interested in the work of the institute will be able to obtain fuller data concerning it by addressing the Institute of Education, University of London.

Employment Scheme in Hampshire Works for Rural Preservation

By JOAN LITTLEFIELD

(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

AN interesting employment settlement scheme has been started in Hampshire by order of Woodcraft Chivalry, an organization which promotes interest in the country-side, hiking, morris dancing, etc. The order has instituted a camp where twenty-five young men living on the dole are working out their own salvation. They have built their own shelters from timber cut on the site, made their own kitchen, table and benches, turned virgin soil into garden plots, and started to keep goats, chickens and a pig.

The men, none of whom were born to the land, sign on for a period of eighteen months. For the first six months they work at camp construction, road-making, drainage and food raising; for the second six they hike through England, wearing the green uniform of the order, live 'as' best they can on their limited means, and give exhibitions of morris dancing; for the last six months they render services, fighting forest fires, carrying out survey work, keeping a watch on the coast, assisting in archeological endeavor and doing what they can to further the preservation of rural England.

Cost of Novel Camp

IT costs about $1,200 to equip a camp for fifty men, provided the land is lent or given; maintenance charges come to about $4 a week per man, towards which the average contribution is $2, the rest being supplied by the order, and each man receives fifty cents a week pocket money.

The men rise at 7 o'clock, bathe in the river, have breakfast at 8, lunch at 1, dinner at 5:30, cocoa and biscuits at 9:30 and lights out at 11. In the intervals they work in the garden or the woods, build or attend to the cooking, and after a time each man chooses his own particular job. There is a general craft room with two or three looms, one of which the men made for themselves, and here they weave sound cloth for lumber jackets and knit socks for hiking.

ROMANCE OF SOOKE

FROM Sooke village Muir Avenue follows the curve of the coast until it turns into the Whiffen Spit Road leading to Sooke Harbor House.

Whiffen Spit forms a natural breakwater protecting the harbor. Its grey pebbled length stretches three-quarters of the way across to East Sooke. As a place for picnics it is ideal, on the one side a fresh breeze from the sea, and on the other shelter and sunshine with a view of the curving harbor. There is driftwood for fires and perfect peace and quiet.

The Indians have a legend explaining the name Sooke as meaning "the first man." In the beginning a shining casket fell from the sky, and, as it reached the earth, three men stepped from it. The first of these men was called St'oke, which, through various changes, became Soke, and finally Sooke. The Indians who lived by the harbor became known as the Sooke Indians.

But the harbor had another name, for in 1790 it was called Puerto de Revillagigedo after the fifty-second Viceroy of New Spain or Mexico. When the Spaniards took possession of Nootka and claimed the island in the name of the King of Spain, Quimper was sent out on a voyage of exploration. He gave Spanish names to the rivers, bays, and headlands, and although the names for Sheringham Point, Pedder Bay and Royal Roads have been changed, Jordan River, Gonzales Point and Haro Strait still remain.

Whiffen's Spit

IN 1846 the harbor was surveyed by Kellett on the H.M. Surveying Vessel Herald, which was at Esquimalt with a number of other naval ships to protect British interests during the drawing up of the American-Canadian boundary. And the spit was called after John George Whiffen, clerk to Kellett.

One can either picnic on the spit or get a meal at the nearby hotel and then walk along the trail by the coast. It winds along tall trees, where ferns grow in the shade, and to the south there are glimpses of the Olympics with perhaps a freighter or passenger vessel in the Straits, a perfect picture, framed, as it were, by the thick trunks of the trees.

Going back along Muir Avenue, Maple Avenue crosses it. To the right it runs down to the government wharf and the cannery. To the left it connects with Grant Road, and about a quarter of a mile along the right hand side is a track among some trees which leads to an old cemetery. It is one of those peaceful graveyards which appear so often on this island, usually hidden away in the bush and approached by a mossy grass-grown road. But this quiet clearing with its lichened tree, bulbs in the grass and warmth and sunshine in the shady woods, is a place of special interest, for here the Muirs are buried.

The original family came out on the Harpooner in 1849 to work on the Hudson's Bay Company's coal mines. Fort Victoria had been built for six years, the first independent settler came out in the same year, the Beaver and the Cadboro were trading up and down the coast, and supplies were brought from England once a year. The Harpooner made the long trip round the Horn, and finally reached this trading post on the southern shore of an unexplored island. After working for the company, the Muirs bought Captain Grant's farm at Sooke, and here they lived, their names constantly appearing in the history of the island, protesting against the Hudson's Bay Company's monopoly, in political questions, working a claim at Goldstream, and bringing in news of the mines at Leach River. They saw the island change from a Hudson's Bay property to a colony, were here through the Fraser River gold rush, saw the effort to start Sooke City at the time of the Leechtown gold in 1864, and traveled over the Sooke Road when it was first made. They were the foremost of the island's pioneers, and now most of them lie in this quiet place with its simple headstones,

Not far from here is the site of the old Grant house. The house itself has gone, but the new one has its chimney stones and part of a cannon which Grant had on a mossy knoll. The whole place has the air of a long-established farm, its garden with daffodils in the grass, primroses and lilac bushes.

First Settler

CAPTAIN Grant was the first independent settler on the Island. His men and belongings came out on the Harpooner, and he himself came out by Panama. He had sold his commission in an English regiment, and it is curious to think that the first colonist should have been a forerunner of the retired army officers, who, at the present day, have farms in nearly every agricultural district on the Island. He bought a thousand acres, thirty-five of which he had under cultivation, raising excellent crops of wheat, barley, oats, peas, beans, turnips and potatoes. He imported most of his seed from Van Dieman's Land by way of the Sandwich Islands, and he also brought the first broom seeds. As soon as his farm was started he went away for a couple of years, only to find on his return that the land had gone back. He sold the place to the Muirs and left the Island in disgust.

Where Maple Avenue reaches Grant Road it is possible, by turning to the left and continuing for half a mile, to follow a trail along the coast to Otter Point. To the right the road passes some fine old trees, and comes out on to the Jordan River Road a few hundred yards out of Sooke village.

In this small circle is the history of the Indians who were here long before the coming of the white races, of the Spaniards exploring their island, of a captain of the British army, and of the first pioneer men and women. These are places which should be seen by all those who love the history and beauty of the island.

Interesting London Club Has No Clubhouse

ONE of London's most interesting clubs has no clubhouse and never meets in London. It was founded by Lord Bryce in 1906 for graduates or undergraduates of universities and their friends on both sides of the Atlantic, and called the Hellenic Travelers Club, its object being to promote visits to the Eastern Mediterranean, particularly to Greece, for those interested in classical studies and archaeological research.

Before the war, the club carried out one cruise a year in a specially chartered ship. Now at least six cruises, each taking from two to three hundred people, are run in the Spring and Autumn of each year, starting from Venice or Marseilles, and including in their itineraries such countries as Greece, Dalmatia, Palestine and Egypt.

On them one meets a diversity of well-known people, including bishops, ex-cabinet ministers, professors, artists and diplomats, as well as public school boys enjoying educational holidays with their masters, and, of course, the inevitable bright young thing.

Tombstone Exhibition

LONDON, in its time, has had a great variety of exhibitions of sculpture, but the "Co-operative Sculptors" have led the way in organizing an exhibition devoted entirely to tombstones.

The Co-operative Sculptors are mostly young and poor and they discovered that the main demand from friends and the public was for tombstones, so they have concentrated on this side of architecture. As they know the value of money, there is very little marble in the exhibition, a number of the stones on view being composed of common or garden bricks.

The designs are mostly modern, and the angels depicted post-Epstein rather than pre-Raphaelite, but the tombstone makers are not prejudiced and they also show sentimental pieces and are willing to go all Victorian if demand should justify

THE HELL-CAT RANGER

By EUGENE CUNNINGHAM

SHELLEY Raines caught the back of the seat ahead of him and staggered to his feet. The rickety branch-line train had snapped to a halt as though it had crashed into a stone wall.

In the front end of the car, a lanky man had been asprawl in his seat ever since Shelley's coming aboard, snorting beneath the bandanna over his face. Now the bandanna covered his face below the eyes. In each big, hairy paw he held a long-barreled bright pistol.

"Stick 'em up!" he yelled. "Yup! Yup! If y' don't want to be cut off pocket-high!"

A couple of seats ahead of Shelley had been sitting a red-headed, salty-looking young fellow. Shelley had noticed a constable's badge on the red-head's flannel shirt.

The red-headed youngster drew a revolver.

The gunman's pistol roared; roared again. The constable's hand came away from the Colt butt. He fell forward across a seat, then slipped into the aisle.

Shelley saw the dust jump from the fellow's old serge coat. Three bullets landed of the four fired. Under the impacts of the .44 slugs, the man flinched like a hanging sack punched with a stick. Desperately he tried to lift, to steady, his guns. Suddenly he collapsed, in a limp huddle that seemed all gaunt arms and legs.

Shelley streaked up the aisle and kicked the long-barreled pistol out of reach. Then he bent and twitched the man's bandanna down. With first glimpse of that narrow, high-nosed dark face, Shelley's eyes jumped to the killer's gun-hand.

"Billy Zwing!" he grunted fiercely.

For there was the mark made by the guard's bullet three months before, when the life-termer broke for freedom out of Huntsville. Billy Zwing, prominent in the ranks of train-robbing experts.

From outside sounded a pandemonium of shooting and yelling. Shelley raced to the rear end of the car. He looked out cautiously through the pouring rain from the steps. Dark figures were just dropping out of the car ahead. A warning yell sounded.

Instantly, the darkness up there by the car was shredded with orange flames. Shelley went into action. But in that rain and darkness it was hard to do any accurate shooting. Nor did the robbers wait to fight. They swung over the low enbankment along which the railroad ran, to be swallowed by the night.

Shelley dropped off and raced forward to where the robbers had last been seen. The crew, with a group of passengers, joined Shelley beside the car.

"They threw a tree across the track," spoke up the engineer. "I just give her the air in time to keep from slammin' into it. Then a little man, bandanna over his face, swung up with a cannon. He covered me an' Ted. When the others called him, he jumped off again. Fast work."

With the help of the passengers the crew managed to get the cottonwood off the track.

AS they climbed aboard the train, the boy in the baggage car told Shelley how two of the robbers had scooped up the eight express packages, according to plans evidently well worked out.

Well, thought Shelley, if this were the work of the Bart Bacus gang—as Billy Zwing's presence seemed to indicate—the members of that gang had had plenty of practice. Eight big robberies in two years.

Passengers had placed the body of Steve Pease on a seat. Conductor Denison came up to Shelley.

"There's one of our passengers that never made a move after Zwing started shooting," he grunted. "I reckon he must have died of pure scare. He's an Easterner we picked up at Olvera. I think he was visiting with old Don Gaspar Olvera on the Bell Rancho, below town. Saw him on the street the other day with young Gil Olvera—old Don Gaspar's nephew, you know. Just took a look at his card case. The name is Arthur D. Wynn, from New York City."

Shelley got up to look at the little grey-haired Easterner. Then Shelley bent over Billy Zwing while the train lurched on at top-speed toward the country seat. From head to foot he searched the dead train robber and escaped convict.

In moving the serge coat, Shelley heard something rustling in its skirt. A piece of paper had slipped from a hole in the inside pocket down into the lining. Shelley fished it out.

Written in lead pencil on cheap tablet paper, the letter had top and bottom torn off, as if to guard the postoffice, date and signature. It was the most weirdly misspelled letter Shelley had ever seen. Shelley translated it to read:

"Bart has asked me to tell you that we are heartily glad of your escape. You ask of Vine Willyard. He has gone to Oklahoma and we have not heard of his arrival. You will be safe to come here after dark on the 19th. A fat hen is on and you will be of great help. Bart will tell you that I want to meet you. Mun Amie."

Then it had been Bart Bacus' gang! Billy Zwing, breaking out of the penitentiary, had naturally been anxious to get in toueh with Bart Baeus as soon as possible. He had finally got a letter through. Bart—who could neither read nor write—had evidently gotten some girl to read Zwing's message and answer it.

Zwing, then, must have gone to the place originally on the heading he had so carefully torn off. Over the "fat hen" they had talked. He had come in on this job with Bart.

Sheriff Bull Pease came growling aboard as the train lay at the station of the county seat. Shelley remembered something else he had heard about this big sheriff of Beadle County—his antipathy for the Rangers.

THE sheriff stood staring without expression at his dead nephew, the read-headed constable.

"Anybody that knowed Tanner County or Beadle County wouldn't waste time holding up this sick excuse for a railroad," snarled the sheriff. "All the express it would carry in a year wouldn't keep one light-eatin' train-robber for a month."

Which was a point that had already occurred to Shelley, who wondered that the most efficient gang of train robbers in the Southwest should have bothered to stop this one-horse train at all.

The fact that the train was robbed seemed to indicate that there had been something on the train for once which Bart Bacus thought it worth while to get. But what was that thing? Shelley had gone over the messenger's list. There had been one package consigned by Wynn from Olvera to Beadle. But that bore a valuation of only fifty dollars.

Interruption came at that moment from the edge of the clearing behind Shelley. It took the form of a shrill, peculiar yell. There was nothing in sight. He turned back to the girl, who was staring with face that reminded him of a disturbed wolf.

"That ees my leetle brother," she said in a worried voice. "You weell stay here. I go see him."

Shelley waited for the girl to return.

As he was beginning to believe that she had had ample time to talk with her brother about

The man crashed down and lay motionless.

"Yuh want me to trail along with yo' posse?" Shelley asked.

"No. I don't want yuh!" the sheriff barked.

"Suit yourself," Shelley said indifferently. "Here's somethin' I took off Billy Zwing a while back. Does it mean anything to you?"

Slowly Bull Pease mumbled over the letter. Then he made a disgusted sound and handed it back.

"I got no time to be settin' around crackin' my brain about that fool letter," Sheriff Pease informed him flatly. "You go your way an' I'll go mine."

"My, yuh shore got a sweet, trustin' disposition," said Shelley. "A' right! I'll keep this note."

Shelley found a rooming-house. He went promptly to bed, as promptly to sleep. After breakfast, he found that the sheriff and his posse had already ridden for the scene of the robbery.

As for Shelley, that letter lay heavily on his mind.

Leaning against the front of the restaurant in which he had eaten, Shelley saw hurrying toward him a grey-haired man in citizen's clothing. He proved to be the town doctor, and was full of the case of the dead Easterner.

The doctor submitted that Wynn must have suffered for years from a weak heart. Shelley showed the puzzling letter to the doctor.

"That letter," said the doctor, "was written by a girl of French extraction who spelled phonetically. Those two last words are her rendition of the French term 'mon ami'—'my friend.'"

"Yuh git around a lot," Shelley said slowly. "Can yuh think o' anybody in Beadle County or Tanner that would fit in with this letter?"

"I can," the doctor nodded, without hesitation. "Due west of here about fifteen miles—which is almost due north of where the train was stopped—is a little ranch that's owned by an old Frenchman named Leboux. He has a large family of both boys and girls. They have a rather hard name in this section."

"Where can I git a pretty good hawse an' saddle?"

"In my corral," the doctor smiled. "I've got a big half Morgan devil that it will be a real favor to me to have you ride."

SHELLEY got the big, spiendid half Morgan and rode out of town in the direction indicated by the doctor.

It was not yet noon when he came to a wilderness of scrubby brush—to a large stump-studded clearing in the centre of which was a long, double log cabin. A slender girl came out of the house and to the edge of the gallery. She was a vivid creature, as fiercely pretty as a panther kitten.

"I'm a pore lonesome cowboy lookin' for a fella," said Shelley. "I wonder if I've come to the right place to find out about him."

"Who ees it you're want?" she demanded, with no lightening of the suspicion in her face. "We are know not so moch,' we."

"I'm lookin' for a Mister Turner," Shelley said.

"We are not know him," the girl said promptly. But her eyes had narrowed the merest shade—and "Turner" was one of Billy Zwing's aliases.

"Well—ell, then, it might be—Wallace. Billy—Mr. Wallace—wanted me to—go into business with him—couple years ago. But I couldn't see it that way, then. Since then—well, things at home got so hot that—I figured it would be a good idee to move. I decided to look him up. Especially since he had got able again to go back into business."

"Oh," the girl said and nodded. "So you are—Billy's—" She stopped.

"Yeh, I'm Billy Zwing's brother Grav. Mr. French—" that was one of Bart Bacus' aliases—"has likely heard Billy talk about me. Any idee where I can git in touch with Billy?"

She nodded. This time she smiled at him. And she was nobody's fool, either. Only the luck of knowing that Billy Zwing had a brother, and knowing his location at this moment, had enabled him to get from her any information whatever.

"They have go over to a safe place in Tanner County. They have done one ver' good job. With help from one y'ong man——" any reasonable subject, there came from the brush where she had disappeared that same queer cry that her brother had given.

There was something about the sound to raise one's hair. Shelley whirled the big black on a dime, dropped flat over the pommel of his saddle and rammed in the hooks. The big horse went forward as if shot from a catapult.

He made the brush, but under a rifle fire that came from both sides of the clearing, and, as he jumped into the shelter of the scrubby growth, from the house as well.

LEAVING the clearing, he saw a heavy sorel disappearing across a little open space along what looked to be a stock trail. And, if he had not seen the same horse tied to a hitch-rack in Beadle that very morning Shelley was very much mistaken.

"Oh, ho!" he grunted to himself without checking the black's speed. "Li'l brother, he was in town. Knows me for a Ranger likely. An' the gang has gone over to Tanner County, have they? Well, I reckon if I'm to do any good in Tanner, I better be lightin' a shuck out o' this."

Shelley turned south and east, pulling the black down to a fast trot after he thought that he was out of reach of the Leboux family.

It was getting dark when he got into the county seat of Tanner County to hunt for Sheriff Tennon.

Lou Tennon was an entirely different type of officer from Bull Peace of the adjoining county. An old Ranger himself, he worked with Rangers accordingly. Shelley gave his version of the train robbery of the night before. He told of his visit to the Leboux place.

"My sister's aunt's old black cat!" breathed Lou Tennon at the end. "Marie, that girl you talked to, is just as bad as any of the men. Too bad about that fellow Wynn gettin' scared to death that way," Lou Tennon added. "I run into him down at Olvera when he was visitin' with old Don Gaspar. Mighty nice man he seemed to be."

"What was his line?"

"He worked for some rich fellow back in New York that was crazy about collectin' old things to put in a museum he owns. I never asked what he was doin' at the Olvera ranch, but I reckon maybe old Don Gaspar had somethin' Wynn wanted to buy for his boss. Don Gaspar is just about broke, an' I reckon if he had anything anybody would buy, he'd be mighty glad to sell."

"I have got a feelin' in my bones, Lou, that somethin's funny about this robbery. I been swingin' my loop in the dark, tryin' to catch on to somethin'. Now I'm going to Olvera, because that's the only li'l peg I see that I might hang anything on to."

SHELLEY headed south for the little town beyond which lay the ranch of that early settler, Don Gaspar Olvera.

By the supper hour he was swinging stiffly down before the great hollow square of an adobe ranch-house of the old Spanish type. Standing at a door beneath the roof of the open gallery that ran around the patio, was Don Gaspar Olvera himself.

Don Gaspar was a tiny, dark-clad figure, with a thin, sad face beneath a great mop of snow-white hair. His eyes were large, brown and kindly.

"I'm Sergeant Raines, o' the Rangers," Shelley told him quietly. "I come to yuh, Don Gaspar, because I believe yuh can answer a question I been askin' myself ever since the robbery the other night."

He wondered if it were his imagination only, or if Don Gaspar's face really seemed to settle into hard, worried lines.

"Come in," said Don Gaspar in English. "I will have a man take care of your horse."

Shelley sat down in the office and built a cigarette.

"You knew this man Wynn mighty well, didn't yuh, Don Gaspar?" he inquired, watching the tiny Spaniard from the corner of an eye.

"Yes—and no. He was a splendid gentleman. We had much in common interest in this region and in all of Spanish-America. Yes, I think I knew him well. But I had not known him long.

That has a lot to do with the robbery. I know—" he took a shot in the dark here, "—that when Wynn shipped this little green bell to Beadle, meaning' to reship it from the' to New York, he put that $50 valuation on the package just to keep people from knowin' how valuable it really was."

Don Gaspar stared at Shelley as if he were something uncanny. Then, slowly, he nodded.

"He paid me sixty thousands of dollars for this heirloom."

"An' now Bart Bacus has got it," Shelley nodded thoughtfully. "And he knows it's valuable . . ."

"Yes, it was in that package, with a valuation of fifty dollars. And now this Bart Bacus has the Green Bell of the Olveras, the Green Bell of Death, in his rough, careless, ignorant hands!"

"How did Bart Bacus know it was on that train?" Shelley shot at him.

"I—I—" and now Don Gaspar's hands were not rock-steady. He seemed to have snapped under the strain. He lay back in his deep chair.

"Who else, besides you an' Wynn, knew this would be sent that way, on that train? Yuh're holdin' back somethin'. Who are yuh covering' up?"

"My—nephew, Gil Olvera, the only son of my only brother. He is my secretary. He has known as much as I about everything. He and I and Wynn were the only ones who knew that I had sold the Green Bell of Death. It is a great emerald carved into the likeness of a bell with a ruby-and-gold clapper. One of the emeralds of Cortez, given my ancester by Cortez himself, and which has been since that time the treasured heirloom of the Olveras."

"Where's yo' nephew now?" Shelley grunted.

INWARDLY he was triumphant. He had the whole thing plotted. This Gil Olvera, knowing the value of this bell, knowing it was going in that crazy makeshift of a baggage car with one boy for guard, and knowing of Bart Bacus' presence in the region had thrown in with the gang—had schemed to stop the train in order to steal that package.

"Where's yo' nephew?" Shelley asked again.

"He has disappeared. In the circumstances, do you think it likely that he will reappear?"

Shelley shook his head, then he accepted the old man's invitation to stay overnight.

After Shelley had gone to the room assigned him, he could not go to sleep.

He lay, smoking. He mulled over the whole business. Slowly it came to him that not Bart Bacus, but Gil Olvera, had the gem. Gil Olvera would be the man to sell it.

Shelley's cigarette had gone out long before, when there came a faint creaking at the door. As usual, Shelley had one revolver under him. Now his hand moved the necessary two inches to curve about its butt. He watched the door, or rather stared in its direction, for it was pitchy dark in the room.

Then the door creaked again. This time he thought it was being closed. Shelly waited awhile, then edged over onto the floor and crossed it without noise. He put his ear to the door and listened for a long while, but heard nothing. It seemed to him that somebody wanted to know if he were sound asleep.

Shelley slipped on shirt, trousers and socks. He rammed his left-hand Colt in his waistband.

Then the creaking door opened quietly under Shelley's expert and cautious hand. He went scouting in the grayish darkness, back in that part of the house given over to store rooms.

A black, squat figure showed for an instant in the mouth of the passage—the patio end. Moving toward Shelley it vanished, swallowed up in the darkness.

Another figure popped into sight, "skylighted" for an instant against the greyish-black of the patio.

"Did you find it?" one asked the other in Spanish. The other answered, "No."

The patron will be angry.

"Not with me. A man cannot find that which is not there. The young patron said it was not there."

SHELLEY followed them by the noise they made, for they were invisible in that tunnel. Then, abruptly, he heard the slap-slap of their sandals growing fainter, and he was at the end of the passage, looking out towards the dark bulk of corrals and sheds. Their footsteps were no longer ahead of him.

Shelley whirled and ran back. He found a cross passage some four feet wide, but there was no longer any sound to guide him. He slid down the passageway, feeling for its sides. From under one came a pallid light. He listened at the door, then whirled abruptly to listen to something that seemed to be moving in the patio a long way off. But the sound was not repeated.

Shelley opened the door before him very cautiously, and found a storeroom. A trap-door broke the floor, and up from some excavation came the light he had seen.

He inched over to hear the mumble of voices beneath him. By lying flat on the floor he could look down into a stone-floored room.

"I told you that Bacus took it," a voice—it struck Shelley as being that of a young man—was saying. "If you will let me go I will get it from him on some pretext, but I swear I never put my hand on it. As soon as they sprang into the car and snatched the packages, Bacus took it. He has it now. I was to go back to him as soon as I could make a good excuse. We planned to go to New York together to arrange its sale. . . .

"Why will you act as if this were your loss? You have the money he paid—why trouble? What is sixty thousand to that millionaire? Not so much as a dollar would be to us. I'm sick of being poor. There's no justice in a few having so much and the rest of us nothing. No, I am not sorry I planned with Bacus to rob the train."

"You are no Olvera," same the voice of another—a familiar one. "I sold the Green Bell of the Olveras only because I am an honorable man—because my good friend, Colonel Stett, sorely needed the sixty thousand he had loaned me on this property. Now, you would make me a party to a theft. Now, what can I do? I must deliver to the man who bought it either the Green Bell or the money he paid for it. I have not the money. All because of your treachery."

Shelley had heard all of the family secrets he wanted. There was a rough stair under him. He slid down it, gun muzzle jumping up. Don Gaspar stood on the stone floor of the big, underground room, while on a pallet by a big cedar pillar—shackled to it with heavy trace chains and padlocks—lay a handsome young man with a very sulky face. Two mozos whom Shelley had seen about the house stood like statues in a corner—probably the men who had passed him in the darkness.

"Sorry," Shelley said to Don Gaspar, "but I had a feelin' yo' nephew was here; that he was the one responsible for the stealin'. I'll have to take him along. Train robbery—and murder."

"Murder!" Gil Olvera gasped, a hand sliding to his neck.

"Yes, murder. The whole outfit will awing for the murder of the constable—"

"But I had nothing to do with it. That was Zwing. I was outside."

"No difference. Now, if you know what's good for yuh, yuh'll hand over the Green Bell."

"Bacus took it, I tell you."

"Yuh're a liar by the clock—and not even a good liar. The whole outfit knows yuh took it. Yuh aimed to make an excuse an slide out to New York with it. Everyone tells the same story apart from the others. Goin' to hand it over? No—o?"

"If I deliver the Green Bell—" Gil Olvera seemed to be having trouble in talking. He licked his lips "—will you keep them away from me? Will you swear to it?"

Shelley nodded. Shamelessly Gil turned to his uncle.

"There is a loose tile in my bedroom floor. It has a broken corner. It can be pried up. The Green Bell is under it."

DON GASPAR grunted to one of the mozos and the man vanished. He was back in five minutes, with a brown paper-wrapped package in his hand. Don Gaspar opened it with hands that trembled. He sighed when he saw its contents. He held it up. A shimmering green wonder of a thing; a translucent bell, carved from a single great emerald. The clapper was a ruby as large as the end of Shelley's little finger, suspended by a bar of gold.

The old man handled it reverently, then rewrapped it in cotton and held it out to Shelley. Then he unlocked the chains that held Gil.

"There is no chance to—"

"No," said Shelley grimly. "I wish there was for yo' sake, but he's got to come along."

Gil Olvera's hand came up to his mouth. There was a twinkle of something shining, a muffled report. He dropped. A stubby little pistol fell from his hand.

Shelley jumped forward. A heavy pistol report bellowed on the stair. The bullet sang through that very spot where he had been, only a split-second before. He whirled, automatically. He slammed a shot and another upward, before he knew what he fired at.

Down into the stone-floored room came sprawling a big, black-haired, grimly handsome man, a man whose picture was on thousands of reward circulars.

There was a bullet-hole in Bart Bacus' forehead.

There sounded the roar of firing from somewhere at a distance. Shelley tossed the Green Bell to Don Gaspar and leaped up the steps past Bart Bacus.

The firing was from the front of the house; from outside of the patio, by the sound of it. He sprinted along the cross-passage and into the black tunnel leading to the patio. When he reached the mouth of it, he was in time to see a dark figure come into the patio from the passage that led out upon the front yard. The man's hands were throwing flame.

He was firing into the passage he had come through.

FROM the passage came the combined roar of many shots. The man crashed down and lay motionless.

"Did we get him?" Lon Nicholas yelled anxiously.

"Yeh. An' I got Bart Bacus!" Shelley answered.

Lon and Shelley together bent over the body. Lon scratched a match. It was Del Grounds, who had died like a wolf in a corner as he had always sworn to die.

"That's the layout, then!" Lon said grimly. "An' no expense to the country for trials! Bobo Gullsen's dyin' outside. He says they came over to get some kind o' Green Bell that Gil Olvera took out o' the baggage-express-car, time o' the robbery. Bart got suspicious o' Gil—don't blame him for that!—an' figgered he'd rather keep this thing. It's s'posed to be worth heaps."

When they had brought up the bodies of Bart Bacus and Gil Olvera to the patio, old Don Gaspar again handed Shelley the precious little package.

"The Green Bell of the Olveras has become again the Green Bell of Death," he said dully. "Take it! A death a generation it has brought' us. I never want to see it again."

"Bad luck, huh?" drawled Lon Nicholas, staring. Then, as Done Gaspar turned away, he grinned sardonically. "Mebbe so—but it brought good luck to Texas an' the railroads. The Bacus outfit is done. Brought us mucho dinero, Shelley, in rewards. An'—"

"An' heaps o' fun," Shelley said, with an anticipatory grin, as a terrific bellowing came from outside the patio. "For—Yere comes Bull Pease, just in time to be too late!"

Nebel's Rocket Will Be Radio Controlled on First Flight Soon

(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

THE grounds of Rudolf Nebel's Berlin Rocket Works cover about one and one-half square miles and contain ten small buildings that serve as offices, workshops, testing stands and garages. At present some fifteen men are employed.

A visitor was permitted to see the new rocket now under construction and examples of older rockets, and drawings of old and new models were freely displayed and discussed.

"The "motor" is built into the front of the machine instead of in the rear, in the more usual manner. It contains no moving parts, but, as in all rockets, a combustion or continuous explosion chamber. It is connected by ribs to the main structure that holds the fuel containers, and, like all the new models, accommodates the crew. There is an appreciable air space between the engine and the body of the machine. This space ensures greater safety and improves flying.

The guide vanes are placed at the head of the rocket, by the motor, instead of at the rear. This also increases the accuracy of flight direction.

Automatic Steering

AFTER some further trial flights and with the aid of more money, an automatic steering device will be applied to the new rockets. Until this is included the direction of flight will not be perfect.

In firework rockets it is more economical to use liquid fuel than powder and Mr. Nebel is employing fuel and liquid oxygen instead of fuel and air. With the old fuel, gasoline, and under the old arrangements, an explosion occurred at every fifth start. The new fuel, whose composition is a secret, reduced the risk of explosion considerably. Gasoline or oil and pure oxygen produce a mixture that readily explodes by itself. The new fuel consists of a mixture of two known liquids, one of which is not affected by oxygen.

Safety is further ensured by a cooling arrangement of the motor or explosion chamber, already successfully employed in other fields of engineering. Safety from explosion and accuracy in flying are the main problems in rocket construction.

Equipped With Radio

A ROCKET to be fired off soon near Magdeburg will be equipped with a radio device so the rocket may be located during its flight. It is expected the rocket will reach 27,000 feet. This rocket will be unmanned, but later examples, it is said, will carry a crew.

The landing of the Magdeburg rocket will be accomplished by parachute. This method will be employed for subsequent flights unless later rockets are automatieally changed into gliding planes for landing purposes.

Magdeburg's "Rocket Day" is to be arranged on a grand scale. Mr. Nebel says it has been partly financed by the city and the German Federal Railways. Rockets for various purposes will be on view.

According to Mr. Nebel, a rocket traveling from Germany to New York would reach a height of 1,300 miles. Before such heights are reached, he adds, it is probable that cosmic rays and temperatures approaching the absolute zero point would be met and these might affect the rocket or its contents. Naturally their effect would have to be counteracted.

Fine Tablet Memorial Is Erected in Paris

A TABLET memorial to a man who saved the lives of 1,500 persons during the terror in the French Revolution has just been unveiled at the Comedie-Francaise.

Of all the vast numbers of monuments and memorials erected in France during recent years, this is one of the most touching.

Charles-Hippolyte Labussiere, to whom the memorial tablet was unveiled on a wall in the oustere corridors of the age-old Comedie-Francaise, was a comedian during the French Revolution. He was employed on the Committee of Public Safety—that dread tribunal which sent so many to the guillotine. Labussiere had always a soft heart for the victims of the terror, and when the files of those condemned to the guillotine or about to be judged were placed in his care he religiously rolled them in mud, stamped on them with his feet, and threw them into the River Seine.

In this way he saved the lives of no less than 1,100 persons, including six members of the Comedie-Francaise

This Week's Anniversaries

Frederick Walker

ON June 4, 1875, Frederick Walker, an eminent English artist, died at St. Fillan's, in Perthshire, Scotland. He was only thirty-five, but he left behind him many paintings. It was he who gave to the designs of the great novelist and humorist, Thackery, the spirit, finish and grace which made the engravings so much admired. Many engravings from his designs were published in Once a Week and in some of the books of a former day. About the year 1863 he gave up the illustrations by which he had earned a living and began to paint in oil and water colors. An exhibition of 150 of Walker's pictures was held the year following his death. He was a lover of nature, as the titles of his pictures show.

James de Carle Sowerby

ON June 5, 1787, James de Carle Sowerby was born. He was one of a family of naturalists and artists. He wrote about the shells of the seashore and illustrated his works. His father's work on botany was highly valued in Great Britain. The careful observers and illustrators deserve the gratitude of students of natural history. There is room for such work in Canada.

Sir John A. Macdonald

ON June 6, 1891, Sir John Alexander Macdonald, Premier of Canada, died, mourned by Canadians from Halifax to Victoria. He came to Canada from Scotland as a little boy and served her during the greater part of a long life with great ability and an unselfish and far-seeing diligence. As a youth of twenty he was called to the bar, and nine years later entered the Parliament of Upper Canada, now the province of Ontario. It was due to John A. Macdonald more than to any other statesman that Canada is now a united nation. He was a Conservative and a believer in protection. As such he had many strong opponents but few personal enemies. That he was always right and never made mistakes no one will claim. Blessed with a gift of humor and a store of natural affection, this statesman made friends in country and town. One of the finest tributes to his memory was made by the Liberal leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Our love of Canada, our loyalty to the Mother Country and our pride in our native land should make Canadian boys and girls honor the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald.

Empress Charlotte

JUNE 7, 1840, recalls a very sad story. It was the birthday of Charlotte, daughter of Leopold of Belgium, and wife of Maximilian, the ill-fated Emperor of Mexico. This brave and gallant Austrian prince was persuaded by the French Emperor, Louis Napoleon, to accept the crown offered by a Mexican deputation. He brought his young wife to share his honors. It was not long before the Mexicans quarrelled with Maximilian, and the French recalled their troops. The young wife was sent to Europe to ask for help. Overcome with grief and anxiety, the poor young woman went mad and spent many years in confinement. Maximilian, who refused to desert his friends and followers, was defeated, captured, tried and shot. So great had been his misery that death, he said, was for him a happy deliverance, not an agony.

Gen. Philip Cunliffe-Owen

JUNE 8, 1828, was the birthday of Sir William Cunliffe-Owen. Though bred a naval officer, this distinguished gentleman spent most of his life in peaceful public service. In London he was director of the foreign sections of the International Exhibition of 1862. In Paris, in Vienna and in Philadelphia, he managed the British sections of these great World's Fairs, winning praise and honors. Cunliffe-Owen had charge of several museums in London. Such work helped to bring nations together and to create among the workers of each a desire to excel.

Charles Dickens

ON June 7, 1870, Charles Dickens died. Long before that the great story teller was known to readers of English wherever they lived. This author was born at Portsmouth in 1812, so was not an old man when he died. He was only nine years old when he came to London. He was poor, but by the time he was twenty-five he had written "Sketches by Boz" and people were laughing over "The Pickwick Papers." Then in ten years "Oliver Twist," "Nicholas Nickleby," "Barnaby Rudge," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "Dombey & Son," "David Copperfield" appeared, and were followed by others. These books and the stories in "Household Words" and "All the Year Round" contained characters which were as real to the readers as the people they lived among. How children loved Little Nell, hated Murdstone, pitied Oliver Twist, admired Agnes and laughed at Pegotty and her queer Barkis. Do the boys and girls of these days get as much enjoyment and wholesome fun out of their books as Dickens gave their grandfathers and grandmothers in Victorian days?

Lydia H. Sigourney

MRS. Lydia Hartley Sigourney died at Hartford, Connecticut, on June 10, 1865, aged seventy-three. She is a type of the many who have made the most of the moderate talents given them. Miss Hartley was a New England teacher before, at the age of twenty-seven, she married Mr. Charles Sigourney, a merchant of Hartford. She had, before her marriage, written tales, essays and poems to please and instruct young readers. More ambitious were works written after her marriage as well as contributions to magazines. Mrs. Sigourney, like many other American writers, paid a visit to Europe and on her return wrote "Pleasant Memories of Pleasant Lands." This good lady served her generation well, but her place has now been taken by others.

New Adventures of Old Friends

Adventure in the Night

ALL through the night the wind had roared and rumbled round the windows of the cottage on the cliff. Far below huge waves thundered into a cave; the darkness was full of sound and excitement.

Ben, lying awake, was excited, too. He felt that he would like to be outside watching the sea's turmoil. How thrilling, too, to think that he was on an island, usually a peaceful gorse-gold island, stretching to the blue of the English Channel; for he and his brother Victor had come to stay with their uncle and aunt in Guernsey.

Ben could hear Victor's breathing in a bed near; he was asleep, and so were his uncle and aunt in the next room. How could they all sleep through such a storm?

Suddenly Ben sat up in bed with a start. What was that?

There it was again—high above the roaring wind. A rocket! A call for help. The next moment he was out of bed and had woken his brother.

"Victor," he whispered, "there's a boat in distress. They're sending up rockets. Will you come out?"

Dressing took only a minute or two and presently the boys stood on the cliff gazing at the dark sea, in their hands a thick rope, while the wind ran at them like a wild animal, pushing them along. Around them the rain lashed, veiling the churning water below, until suddenly from behind a fierce cloud a portion of the moon came, its light catching here and there the spray of the high waves.

"Come on!" Ben said. "We'll climb down. Perhaps if the coastguards haven't heard anything we can find them."

"I don't expect they will hear in this storm: there's no station this side of the cliffs, and no lifeboat for a long way off," Victor answered, as the boys began their descent.

When they were about half-way down the moon, which was hidden again, was once more uncovered, and now they saw out on the tossing sea a sight which made them pause.

A little schooner was laboring to gain the shore, but she seemed to be making little headway except towards the rocks.

What could just two boys and a rope do?

However, they went on. At the base of the cliffs was the tiniest of harbors in which one or two small boats rocked excitedly about; but of what use, now, were such small craft? They would be mere match boxes on that boiling surf.

On the little scrap of beach was space enough for the boys to walk about; the sand was wet and when the waves came in they were wading past their ankles. It was then Ben had an idea. He had brought with him his electric torch, and, holding it high, he began to make over and over again a signal.

Soon it seemed that the sailors were doing their best to pilot the boat towards the light. Now how close she seemed! Still Ben held his torch up, and then it suddenly seemed as though in front of them the figure of a man was struggling in the waves. Nearer and nearer he came, at first thrown back and then carried shorewards. At last, ah! at last, he held the other end of Ben's rope.

Then slowly the rescue work began, the man flinging the rope out to the boat; and presently the final plunge was made and the little boat gave a lurch forward on a wave to cut her way into the sand, where she lay like an exhausted swimmer.

"By the aid of your light we could keep our eyes on the shore," the skipper remarked, as he and the small crew of five men climbed the cliff with the boys. When the cottage was reached they found there a welcome and some hot tea and rugs to rest on for the night.

When the morning came, and the sun shone in at the cottage windows, it shone also on the little schooner Polly Rose down by the rocks and on a quiet blue sea.—My Magazine

My Own Shall Come to Me

Serene I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea.
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me.
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap when it has sown,
And gather up its fruit of tears.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave comes to the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

The waters know their own and draw
The brook that springs in yonder heights;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delights.

THIS DOG'S LIFE

By DAVID NEWELL

Bull Terrier

If you'd say "Sic 'em" to this pair
You'd start a lot of trouble there;
Bull terriers take great delight
In almost any sort of fight!

But we can't blame the dogs, because
In days before there were good laws
Their masters put them into pits
To tear each other into bits!

They called this "sport," but you and I
Would hate to see dogs fight and die;
Although we cannot help admiring
A dog so brave and so untiring.

He knows no fear, and even dares
To tackle mastiffs, bulls or bears,
For size is not a barrier
To any pit bull terrier!

Make Friends With Dr. Sun

THIS year the clouds have hidden the face of the sun from us on most hours of the lengthening Spring days. The longest day of the year comes in this month. We will hope for more sunshine.

Some years ago an English doctor wrote a letter to the children. His name was Herbert Barker. The doctor's advice was so good that your editor hopes you will all read it and follow it. Here it is:

I suppose there is hardly one of my young readers who has not, at some time or other, stood and watched the sparrows performing their cleaning operations.

Down to the earth they fly, and if there is any water near, you may have seen them wade in and settle down in it, throwing it over their backs with very evident enjoyment. Afterwards, they stand in the sun and preen themselves, stretching their wings and fluffing out their little brown feathers, thus letting in the warmth of the sun.

It is instinct or Nature, we say, which makes them do this, and perhaps we are right; but there is a lesson in the bath of the sparrows for each one of us if only we look for it—a great secret which they have learnt and known for years, and which is the reason for their happy chirping when the good weather comes. They are friends with the sun—the greatest friend of mankind in general, although we do not always realize it. He will be your friend, too, if you will let him—and the birds will show you how.

Have you ever had a sun bath? Perhaps you will say "No" at once without thinking, but if, at any time, you have had a swim in the sea or the baths and then sat in the sun to get warm you can say you have had a sun bath. And that is exactly what the birds do.

Now that Summer is here—at least, we hope it is!—your chance to make friends with the sun has arrived, and you don't need any formal introduction. All you need do is to cultivate a liking for the open air. Get out into it, turn your face to the sun and let him make you well and keep you so.

You may have heard that in some parts of the world there is a sect of persons called "Sun worshippers." Exactly what their beliefs are I do not know, but I do say that they cannot altogether be blamed for holding that flaming orb in awe, because it can do some wonderful things.

When you are ill, your own doctor comes along and taps you all over, looks very glum, shakes his head and sends you some medicine to take, which is hardly ever pleasant, and is often very nasty indeed.

A Wonderful Doctor

NOW, boys and girls, what will you say when I tell you that the sun is a doctor, and that he cures all kinds of illness without medicine of any kind? I think I can make a very good guess.

You will want to have him make you well next time anything goes wrong with the works of your body.

There is an old saying, however, that prevention is better than cure, and to no other subject does this apply so well as to that of health, and here again our old friend the sun comes in exceedingly useful.

He can not only cure those little aches and pains which we all get at times, but he can actually prevent them. He is a friend indeed. That is why you should know him.

The best means of getting acquainted is simply to walk out of doors on a fine day. Simple, isn't it? Before you will have had time to say "How do?" Old Sol will have greeted you with a warm ray of sunshine, and for just as long as you are an open-air enthusiast—which all young people should be—the sun is your friend.

Neglect him, and he will never do you any good, not because he doesn't want to, but because you will not let him.

I am sure all those who read this little article want to grow up into healthy men and women, and the time to start is now, when you are young. Health is one of those things which money cannot buy, and no matter how rich you may be in years to come, whether you will enjoy those riches or not depends upon how you live and what you do now.

I am not going to tell you to do this exercise or that, because I have recollections of my own boyhood, and I know that the word "exercise"—no matter to what it refers—has an unpleasant sound in youthful ears.

Get Out Into the Air

THIS is all I want to say to you: Make use of this Summer by getting out in the open air. Do not wear too many stuffy clothes, but don light sports wear whenever the opportunity presents itself, and let the sun brown your skin wherever possible.

If you do that, you will give yourself a fine start in life—one which many older people will envy you.

Don't forget the sparrows. Let their presence be a constant reminder to you of the importance of making friends with the sun.

The Sound of the Wind

The wind has such a rainy sound
Moaning through the town,
The sea has such a windy sound—
Will the ships go down?

The apples in the orchard
Tumble from their tree.
Oh, will the ships go down, go down,
In the windy sea?

—Christina Rossetti.

Drive the Nail Home

DRIVE a nail home and clinch it so faithfully that you can wake up in the night and think of your work with satisfaction—a work at which you would not be ashamed to invoke the Muse. So will help you God, and so only. Every nail driven should be as another rivet in the machine of the Universe, you carrying on the work.—Thoreau.

The Little Old Log Cabin of St. Ann's

1858-1933

COMMEMORATING the seventy-fifth anniversary of the arrival of the Sisters of St. Ann in Victoria, Vancouver Island, on June the fifth, 1858.

It was a most alluring scene
That tempted me to stray,
As homeward I went journeying
All on an April day!
Where once a rude log cabin stood
Near lovely Beacon Hill,
I gently oped the garden gate
And wandered in at will.

The air was balmy with the scent
Of prim old-fashioned flowers:
And rich red ribes called to mind
Refreshing woodland bowers.
The newly-gravelled pathway led
Around a cottage neat,
Where, cradled in a holy calm,
Slept memories dim and sweet.

Within, the quietude was fraught
With wonderment to me:
For was not this the fountain-head
Of St. Ann's Jubilee?
Here, in the meek environment
Which marked the pioneer,
Were shrined the very convent walls
That we today revere!

How steeped in worldliness were we,
Did not a thrill arise,
Of kinship down the fleet-winged years
With such fair enterprise!
For here it was, a Sisterhood
Of saints first took their stand,
To labor in their chosen sphere,
In this new Promised Land.

Far, far from home, how staunch and brave,
How tender in distress!
How zealous these whose names today,
We reverence and bless.
The useful arts they taught, the cult
That harbored heavenly joy:
Nor in God's vineyard ever ceased
Their talents to employ.

What peace, despite the toiling hours
That thronged those early days!
And with what soulful glorias
They heralded His praise!
Long silenced now those tuneful lips,
Long dimmed the loving eye;
But lo, like seed that flourishes,
Their works still multiply!

—Mary H. Rathom.

Worse Still

GETTING wrong numbers over the telephone is not always the fault of the operator. The other day an operator who asked if a certain subscriber was on the line got the following reply:

"Yes, this is Mr. 'Arrison. What, you can't 'ear? This is Mr. 'Arrison—haitch, hay, two hara, a hi, a hess, a ho, and a hen—'Arrison."

Why the Kettle Sings

A KETTLE sings before the water boils because a number of tiny bubbles rise from the bottom to the surface and burst. The sound of these numerous little explosions merges into a continuous note which tells us that the water is on the point of boiling.

I dearly love but one day;
And that's the day that comes betwixt
A Saturday and Monday.

No Grumbling

No, I can't grumble,
Said poor old Ann
Who's grey and twisty,
And so's her man,

(A leaky cottage,
A rusty gown,
An empty cupboard;
Life's clock run down!)

No, I can't grumble,
Because I've been
Beside my sweetheart
When trees were green.

I've known some hordships,
I've tasted pain,
But on this bosom
A child has lain.

He served me kindly,
The Lord above,
Who stinted riches
But gave me Love.

—Janet Farwell.

A Child's Prayer

Father, we thank Thee for the night
And for the pleasant morning light,
For rest and food and loving care,
And all that makes the world so fair.
Help us to do the thing we should,
To be to others kind and good,
In all we do, in all we say,
To grow more loving every day.

Island Jersey Breeders Enjoy Saanich Field Day

SAANICH Jersey Breeders were hosts to about fifty of their fellow Jersey breeders on Vancouver Island and adjacent islands on May 28. A launch party of Jersey enthusiasts numbering about eighteen journeyed over from Maple Bay to Deep Cove to meet the Saanich Jersey Breeders and to view some of the outstanding herds. Included in this party was the president of the Cowichan Jersey Club, G. W. Cooper, together with R. Wattie, vice-president, and G. C. Ramsay, secretary, accompanied by many of the Jersey breeders in the Cowichan district.

The Courtenay Jersey Cattle Club was represented by their president, Mrs. Iris Wood, from Merville, who, although a comparatively new breeder, is none the less enthusiastic. From Pender Island came a party including Mr. snod Mrs. Nat. Grimmer and Percy Grimmer. They were especially welcome on account of being among the earlier exhibitors at the larger fairs, although they have not been exhibiting in recent years. Another party from Saltspring was headed by Harold E. Price, who is director of the B.C. Jersey Breeders' Association.

The first farm to call at was that of Miss Moses, who is a recent enthusiast, having purchased four fine black heifers from A. E. Dunvill, Sardis. The party was particularly interested in a young heifer by Signalman and the two-year-old by Lindell Forward Volunteer, who has just freshened and is showing a nice udder.

The next point of call was at Captain C. Wilson's, at Heather Farm. Apart from the interest in his small herd of cows, particular attention was paid to the young bull, recently purchased from the Associated Dairies, Port Haney, who is by the imported bull, Oxford Sultan of Oxford and out of the well known prize-winning cow, Sultan's Gem. The calf-club heifer owned by his son, Ian Wilson, which has just freshened with a nice udder and looks like being a real producer, was also admired by the visitors.

Have Nice Records

CAPTAIN C. E. Gigson's herd was the next point of call. Here the imported cow, Brampton Little Nellie, was admired, and also the calf-club heifers that his son, Humphrey, and daughter, Patricia, owned. These animals were both milking and one nearing the close of a very creditable R.O.P. record. The several daughters of Capt. Gibson's previous herd sire, Babbacombe Sybil Raleigh, it was learned, were also making good R.O.P. tests.

Reg. Thompson, the secretary of the Saanich Jersey Breeders, was then called on, and here the chief centre of interest was the young three-year-old herd sire, who is by the imported bull Signalman. The bull, who was junior champion as a yearling, still looks as if he could go out and hold his own in good company.

It being around lunch time, the party adjourned to Duntuim Farm, the home of Major and Mrs. Macdonald, who had kindly taken charge of the community lunch supplied by the Saanich breeders. After this had been partaken of, the herd of high-producing cows were viewed with great interest. It is difficult to point out the many good producers in this herd, but of particular interest at the present time is Duntuim Seagull, who as a three-year-old has already made over 600 pounds of fat and has several weeks yet to complete the 365-day test she is undergoing.

Harry Lea's small herd of six purebreds were then viewed, including a daughter and three granddaughters of Glamorgan Wexford Bindle. His young bull, Babbacombe Oxford Omega, is a promising animal, being by Mademoiselle Oxford out of Babbacombe Bindie's Davida, who has three good records to her credit and were first prize R.O.P. cows at Vancouver last year.

Interesting Display

"BABBACOMBE" was the next place of call, and here H. E. Burbidge had his herd conveniently arranged so as to give the visitors an opportunity to judge how his herd sires are breeding. The daughters of each bull were placed in separate paddocks. The seven daughters of Gold Standard 2nd are a very uniform bunch, and it would appear that this bull is leaving nice quality daughters with well-shaped udde'. The next pen was a group of fifteen daughters of Glamorgan Wexford Bindie, some having made good R.O.P. records, including Babbacombe Bindie's Bettune, a silver medal record of 545 pounds fat at three years fifty days, and some just calves. They all showed the earmark of the sire being deep and of straight top-line.

The next group was four daughters of Mademoiselle's Oxford, he being out of the great cow, Mademoiselle Deschamps 2nd, by Oxford Sultan of Oxford. In another pen were the foundation cows, amongst them being Mademoiselle Deschamps 3rd, who had recently calved and looking in nice bloom. Ruby of Weston Lake, with three consecutive 305-day records averaging 546 pounds of fat, was admired for her great capacity and wonderful udder. Glamorgan Volage also took the eye of some of the experts on account of her beautiful quality.

W. Horsland was next visited, and great interest was shown in his typy herd of producers, as he has built the herd up and paid for them by retailing milk to Victoria. Great credit is due to this young man, who has worked up a splendid business by retailing purebred Jersey milk.

Have Fine Stock

MOUNT Newton Road was the next venue, where three breeders are situated close together. George Malcolm was the first call; he, like Mr. Horsland, is retailing the milk from his purebred cows in Victoria with considerable success. The first cow in the barn, or rather a heifer, was a calf-club heifer belonging to his daughter Dulcie. This young animal was greatly admired both on account of her type and her production. She freshened at a little over two years last December and is giving thirty-seven pounds a day. Another two-year-old, El Sereno Natalie, was giving forty-two pounds a day. These are both daughters of a son of Glamorgan Wexford Bindie. The good mature cow, Buckland Bo-Peep, with a record of 11,600 milk and 600 pounds of fat, attracted attention. This is one of the good cows from Pender Island.

"Coleshill" Farm, another institution that is delivering high class milk into Victoria. Here amongst the many big producing cows were the four heifers bred by Clive & Aldridge, by the bull Glamorgan Lady's Beau, he being by Agatha's Last Son, out of Glamorgan Lady.

Ian Douglas, young enthusiast on the same road, was the next point of call. He started with a calf-club heifer, and is now the owner of a dozen head; amongst those of interest were two daughters of Golden Standard 2nd, a typy daughter of Glamorgan Pedro's Pilot and a four-year-old daughter of Glamorgan Wexford Bindle, which is carrying a beautiful udder.

Another Fine Herd

THE last point of call, but not in any way the least important, was "Brackenhurst Farm," the home of the genial but unassuming president of the Saanich Jersey Breeders. Mr. Aylard, although a comparatively new enthusiast, has built up a considerable herd. For two years he rented from Mr. Burbidge Golden Standard 2nd, a son of Standard of Oaklands, out of a Blonde's Oxford cow. There were a number of yearling heifers shown by this bull, and, as noticed in the Babbacombe herd, they are particularly typy. His present herd sire is Mademoiselle Oxford, before mentioned. His recent acquisition, the imported cow by Coronation's Oxford King, was greatly admired and great interest was also shown in Interested Lillian, a cow of his own breeding, who has previously made several good records, and is now milking fifty-two pounds a day with a test of 5.5; last month she made over eighty pounds butterfat. She is by a daughter of Corkscrew, out of Duchess of Waikiki, who had a record of over 800 pounds butterfat. He has several daughters of this bull which should form a good foundation in which to build.

After viewing and admiring the herd, the party repaired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Aylard to enjoy refreshments and to discuss the various points of interest they had seen on the day's trip. It was unanimously agreed that such outings as this amongst the breeders from different districts did much good towards good fellowship and to the interests of the Jersey cow.

Stripe Rust of Wheat in Western Canada

THE discovery of stripe rust of wheat in Eastern Saskatchewan, in the Summer of 1932, is a matter of sufficient importance to warrant a brief discussion of the rust and the possibilities of its future spread in Western Canada. In Northern Europe, stripe rust, or, as it called there, yellow rust, is the most serious of rusts parasitic on cereals. In North America its presence has been known for the last seventeen years, but, as the rust was apparently confined to the Pacific Coast, the Rocky Mountain region, and the plains immediately east of the mountains, it has done but little damage to grain crops. In Canada, it has been found annually in Alberta in small quantities since 1918, and traces of it have occasionally been found in Western Saskatchewan. A consideration of the question of why this rust has not already spread throughout the whole of the great plains region, like the stem rust and leaf rusts of cereals, may help to throw light on the possible future spread of this rust.

Attempts have been made at the Dominion Rust Research Laboratory, at Winnipeg, to discover the reason for the limited distribution of this rust in the great plains region. It appears from these studies, as well as from investigation in Europe and in the United States, that the chief reason for its limited spread is the fact that the rust has adapted itself to a climate of cool, humid, Summer weather such as frequently prevails in early Summer on the Pacific Coast, where the rust is common, and, at times, destructive. In the great plains regions the average Summer temperatures are probably too high to permit the growth of the rust. In the plains immediately east of the Rocky Mountains, the persistence of the rust may perhaps be explained by the somewhat lower temperatures common to regions of higher altitude, particularly during the night. The danger of its eastward spread, in the Prairie Provinces, is consequently not great except perhaps in seasons of exceptionally cool and humid weather.

A description of the rust may be of value. The rust attacks wheat, more rarely barley and rye, but is never found on oats. The pustules, which appear mainly on the leaves, are lemon-yellow in color and are usually arranged in long, narrow stripes, whence the name "stripe rust." When infestation is heavy, the glumes of the head and even the kernels themselves may be attacked. The rust appears but rarely on the stems and sheaths of plants.

Hog Output Increases

THE output of hogs in Canada in 1932, amounting to 3,179,000, exceeded that of 1931 by about 555,000 head, and represented the strongest movement during any of the past five years. The actual increase in production was far greater than these marketing figures seem to indicate, owing to the heavy increase in local and farm slaughterings.

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

IF there are any gaps in the rose garden which will have to be filled up in the Fall, the following well-tried roses, all more or less new, will be found to be of value in the Victoria district:

Billy Boy (Per netiana), a deep yellow, semi-double, which is worth growing for its bright green foliage alone. It is mildew-proof, free-flowering and of a very compact habit. When better known, it will be wanted by all who love roses. Possibly no rose has been so well received in England since Shot Silk was introduced.

Another semi-double rose that is a good one is I. Zingari. It has a unique color, brange and scarlet, reminding one of the colors of the old English cricket club of that name. The blooms, it is true, are rather thin, but it is very sweet scented and the blooms are plentiful. A whole bed of this variety would be a wonderful sight.

Marcia Stanhope is a sweet-scented white. It is a seedling of Madame Druschki, but, unlike its parent, has the one thing that its mother lacks—sweet scent. The blooms are well shaped with high, pointed centres and its great size makes it valuable for exhibition purposes.

Holt Hewitt is a rich velvety crimson, something like George Dickson, but has much stronger stems. It is sweet scented, has large blooms of exhibition size and is free flowering.

Fine Small Rose

IVY May is a very delightful little rose of Madame Butterfly parentage. It has the colors of its parent intensified. It has perfectly-shaped buds and is so free flowering that disbudding is necessary to see it at its best. It has a strong scent, but is said to be rather apt to mildew.

Clovelly is a rich satin pink with beautifully-shaped buds on long stems. It is sweet scented, of strong habit, and retains its shapeliness until fully open.

One of the most arresting roses that can be grown is Wilhelm Kordes. The color resembles Gorgeous, but is of so vivid a shade that it is hard to describe. It has tough green foliage and is mildew-proof. The flowers are perfect in shape and no one can go wrong in adding it to his collection.

Older but Good

LADY Inchiquin is older than most of the above, but to those who have not already tried it it can be recommended as a splendid orange-cerise variety. The blooms are large and full and it is sweet scented and valuable for all decorative purposes.

Charles P. Kilham has a color something on the order of Madame Herriot, brilliant orange-red suffused with golden-scarlet. The blooms are of excellent shape, both in the bud stage and when fully open. It is a rose that is well worth growing and will be in great demand when better known.

None of the above roses are new, most of them several years old, but they have been well tried and can be recommended with every confidence to those who like good roses in the garden.

For the Rockery

NO rock garden, however small, is ever completely furnished without a few ramondias, and, moreover, they will succeed in positions where most other rock garden plants will fail. They are hardy and easily grown, if given the proper conditions, and may reasonably be considered one of the dozen best rock garden plants.

The principal and best-known species is ramondia pyrenaica, a native of the Pyrenees, where it thrives between rocky boulders. It forms a large, flat rosette of dark green, crinkly leaves, which fit close to the rock. The flowers are carried on stems of from three to four inches high, and are a beautiful violet-purple with a small orange centre. There are also rose and white-colored forms, but they are hardly equal to the type.

If a few details are considered there will be no difficulty in the cultivation of the ramondias. Good drainage is essential and they should be planted in a vertical position, facing north. Shade is necessary. They must be planted so that water cannot settle in the rosette, but they must have an adequate supply of moisture during the Summer months.

Peat, sand and loam is the best mixture in which to plant ramondias, and the soil must be made quite firm about the roots. If these conditions are supplied, the gardener will be rewarded by a wonderful show of flowers about June 1, and these will persist for a month or six weeks. It is better to get small plants, as these are more easily planted than full-grown specimens. A dry wall facing north or even northeast is an excellent place to plant ramondias. They should be planted so that one has not to stoop to see the flowers. So, if you would have ramondias, see, first, that the drainage is perfect; second, that they are facing north; and third, that no water can lodge in the rosettes.

Pointers on Planning Window Boxes for Variety of Bloom

By DEAN HALLIDAY

ON almost every type of small or average-sized house, window boxes are not only suitable, but friendly and beautiful. With sturdy plants in good growing conditions, one more element will complete the effectiveness—good taste in arrangement. Window boxes can be full of foliage and flowers through the Summer and early Fall.

Never stuff a box with plants. It may look well at first, but as soon as all the plants begin demanding food and water from the limited soil of the plant box, some plants will be choked out, or at least lose their lustre.

Of course, the number and arrangement of the plants in the box will depend on its size and shape, but in designing any box, follow these general rules. Tall plants should be placed at the rear of the box and in the centre. The dark foliage or flowers should be toward the centre. Light-colored and low-growing types should be placed toward the ends or in the front. Dark-foliage vines are used at the front and toward the centre, light-colored vines nearer the ends.

The plants available for use in plant boxes are many and varied. The kind used will depend on the location of the box as to shade or sun.

Here are a few suggestions for plants that can be used in the rear and centre of the box: Flowering maple, geranium, Norfolk Island pine, screw pine and crotons.

Begonia lantana, petunia, asparagus fern, iron plant, dracena, coleus and Iresene are all suitable as fillers toward the centre of the box. Ageratum, candytuft, nasturtium, petunia, sweet alyssum and vinca are best suited for filler towards the ends of the box because of their lighter foliage and flowers.

For the front row of the plants, lobelia, English ivy, German ivy and Wandering Jew had best be planted towards the centre. Sweet alyssum, English daisy and vinca are used towards the ends.

What Is a Catch-Crop?

A CATCH-CROP is a crop which is grown to take the place of a regular crop in the rotation which has been killed by unfavorable climatic conditions, or a catch-crop may be one which is grown along with or between the seasons of regular crops. Most frequently the catch-crop is grown to take the place of some crop which has been Winter-killed, such as clover or Winter grains

Feeding of Turkeys From Hatching to Market

ARTIFICIAL incubation and brooding are entirely satisfactory, and in the end usually insure more turkeys being raised than if done in the natural way. It is true that in incubators one does not get as large a percentage of poults, but brooding artificially seems to give better satisfaction, with less loss and quicker growth than when poults are brooded with hens.

For incubation, a temperature about one degree less than for chicken eggs gives good results, with moisture slightly increased. As soon as the hatch comes off, and the birds are thoroughly dry, the young poults should be moved to a colony brooder, or where battery brooders are available, into the battery brooder.

The brooder house should be the same for poults as for baby chicks—twelve to fourteen feet square, with the stove placed in the middle of the building. The floor should be covered with clean litter and the young poults kept up to within two feet of the edge of the canopy of the brooder for the first two or three days until they become accustomed to their surroundings and learn where to find the source of warmth.

Starter Rations

	Lbs.
Ground wheat	100
Ground oats (hulls sifted out)	100
Ground barley (very fine)	50
Ground corn	75
Alfalfa leaf meal	35
Fish meal	50
Meat meal	50
Milk powder	25
Salt	5
Cod liver oil	(pints) 10

Sour milk is given the birds to drink right from the start, as well as water. Coarse river sand and fine oyster shell are available to the birds at all times. For the first day or two it may help getting the birds to eat, to chop up one or two hard-boiled eggs that have been boiled for at least fifteen minutes and mix them with a small portion of the mash. It is not necessary to continue feeding eggs for more than a few days as they soon become accustomed to eating the dry mash.

Green Feed Essential

GREEN feed in the form of lettuce, finely chopped, fresh green grass, finely cut sprouts from sprouted oats, or finely cut alfalfa, should be provided after the third day. Where the poults can get out on green pasture, it will not be necessary to furnish green feed, but it is desirable to keep them inside for ten days or two weeks and carry the green feed to them. Care should be taken to avoid feeding long grass that has been cut, as the birds will eat the long blades which will roll up in a ball in the crop and often result in death. All green feed should be cut to about a half-inch in length.

After one month of age they can be put on the following mixture fed in hoppers:

	Lbs.
Ground wheat	100
Ground oats	100
Ground barley	100
Beef scrap	40
Bone meal	15
Salt	3

In addition they should have whole grain consisting of 60 per cent wheat, 30 per cent oats and 10 per cent barley in a hopper before them at all times. If the hoppers are kept filled so that the birds never become hungry, and ample hopper space is provided, they will require little fencing to keep them close to their quarters.

Range for Turkeys

ONE acre of alfalfa or clover is sufficient space for 100 turkeys. The one-acre field is best divided into four separate fields by temporary fences, the colony house placed in the middle of the field, and the birds rotated around the four sections, moving them each week from one patch to the next. It is important during warm weather to provide plenty of shade. If natural shade is not available, then some form of artificial shelter should be provided.

During the entire growing period, oyster shell, grit, milk, water, dry mash and whole grain should be before the birds at all times.

Outside Roosting

WHEN the young turkeys are four to six weeks old they prefer to roost outside. At this time, perches four feet from the ground and made of two-by-fours on the flat, placed at least three feet apart, should be provided in a sheltered place close to their feeding grounds. The ground under the perches should be raked up once a week and liberally sprinkled with lime. The feeding hoppers, drinking troughs, etc., should be moved to a new location once every week or two so that the ground does not become too contaminated and the green feed killed off in that particular area. Where the birds are rotated in four small fields, the feeding utensils should be moved each time with the birds.

Turkeys raised in this manner will be fat and ready to market by the first of December without any additional fattening ration, although many have found it desirable to start feeding a wet mash once a day from the first of November, increasing it to twice a day at the first of December, and continuing until the birds are ready for market. The wet mash is composed of the dry mash mixture moistened with milk or buttermilk, or if these are not available, with water.

In the growing of turkeys it is important to maintain a high protein ration by supplying a liberal quantity of beef scrap and milk.

Two Classes of Insect Robbers to Combat

By DEAN HALLIDAY

SMALL boys sometimes menace melon patches, but their depredations are small compared to the ravages in the vegetable garden of insect robbers. In some instances the trouble is easily combated, in others more care and time are necessary.

Insects, from a practical standpoint, may be divided into two classes: (1) those that have biting mouth parts which enable them to chew their food, and (2) those whose mouth parts are adapted only to the sucking of juices; hence they are called biting insects and sucking insects.

The sucking insects do not eat tissue, but are nourished by the juices drawn from the plant tissue. The part of the plant attacked usually curls, dries up and often drops. The insects of this class chiefly encountered are the aphids, or plant lice, of various colors.

The chewing insects may be controlled by the use of stomach poisons, materials which are applied to the parts of the plants attacked, and which, when taken into the stomachs of the insects, along with the plant tissue, kill them. Arsenate of lead, in either paste or powder form, is the commonest poison used.

The sucking insects are controlled best on vegetables by the use of one or the other of the solutions known as nicotine sulphate. These insects must actually be wet with the spray in order to kill them.

Pointers for Growing Celery Successfully

By DEAN HALLIDAY

THE amateur vegetable gardener often shies at the thought of growing celery, but it can be done successfully if certain methods are followed.

Celery can be grown either with or without trenching. In the latter case the seedlings are planted in a slight hollow, the blanching being done by wrapping the stalks in paper, but for Winter celery the trench system is better. The trenches, half a yard wide, are dug, removing top soil, building up the sides with it. Break up the subsoil and mix it liberally with decayed manure. The seedlings plants are lifted with a good ball of soil and planted quickly.

When the plants are one foot high, a loop of raffia is tied around each and when eighteen inches, a second loop is tied around the base. As the plants grow, any sucker shoots springing up from the root centre should be picked out. Water and liquid manure should be used, changing the food at intervals.

Blanching occurs in five or six weeks from the time of being earthed. In wet seasons celery may be attacked by leaf spot; this can be checked by applying Bordeaux mixture

Saanich Jersey Records

FOLLOWING is the April list of fifty-pound cows in the Saanich Jersey Cattle Club:

Two-Year-Olds — A. W. Aylard's Bright Raleigh's Dee, 887 pounds of milk and 46 pounds fat, 32 days fresh; H. E. Burbidge's Babbacombe Standard's Mademoiselle, 892 milk and 45 fat, 33 days fresh; Major Macdonald's Duntuim Seagull, 776 milk and 40 fat, 342 days fresh; Duntulin Sheila, 961 milk and 50 fat, 30 days fresh; Duntuim You'll Do, 915 milk and 54 fat, 81 days fresh.

Three-Year-Olds—Miller Ranch's Ambiecote Spot, 891 milk and 49 fat, 80 days fresh; Babbacombe Bindle's Babette, 563 milk and 45 fat, 218 days fresh; Pedro's Cowslip, 1,228 milk and 67 fat, 94 days fresh; Major Macdonald's Duntulm Eureka Violet, 1,107 milk and 62 fat, 61 days fresh; Duntulm Raleigh, 1,189 milk and 58 fat, 42 days fresh; H. E. Burbidge's Babbacombe Bindles Bella, 803 milk and 52 fat, 26 days fresh; A. W. Aylard's Mallowmot 8th, 887 milk and 53 fat, 103 days fresh; Reg. Thompson's Brackenhurst Lizzie, 1,006 milk and 50 fat, 90 days fresh; W. J. Horseland's Olympic You'll Do's Cowslip, 1,053 milk and 50 fat, 45 days fresh.

Four-Year-Olds—Miller Ranch's Babbacombe Bindle's Beulah, 1,060 milk and 52 fat, 83 days fresh.

Mature — George Malcolm's El Sereno's Goldie, 857 milk and 50 fat, 73 days fresh; Reg. Thompson's Felix Bright Ruby, 1,078 milk and 54 fat, 57 days fresh; George Malcolm's Buckland's Bo-Peep, 1,058 milk and 57 fat, 93 days fresh; A. W. Aylard's Dave's Interested Lilian, 1,186 milk and 60 fat, 35 days fresh; H. E. Burbidge's Ruby of Weston Lake, 1,419 milk and 67 fat, 108 days fresh; Major Macdonald's Duntulm Reminder, 802 milk and 53 fat, 138 days fresh; Duntulm Becky, 1,073 milk and 55 fat, 177 days fresh.

Wins Silver Medal

AMBLECOTE SPOT, which began her Record of Performance test at the age of two years and thirty-seven days, has won the Canadian Jersey Cattle Club's silver medal by her record, according to word received by her owners, Miller Ranch, Rocky Point.

In 305 days on test Spot produced 7,347 pounds of milk and 457 pounds of butterfat, carrying a calf for 252 days of that period. Spot was bred by Mr. Hadwin, Quamichan Lake, Duncan, and was sired by Ada's Quamichan Lad, out of Cowichan Topsy 2nd.

The most important manufacturing industry connected with field crops in Canada is flour milling, which dates back to the settlement at Port Royal (now Annapolis, N.S.), in 1605.

Amateur Boxer Turns Portrait Painter and Wins World's Acclaim

By MERRILL DENISON

Once upon a time (around the Gay Nineties, if our chronology be not too hopelessly amiss) artists had to be pretty artistic to satisfy the public notion of an artist. It was the great garret and dry crust epoch, you might say, when corduroy pants and velvet tam-o'-shanters were the hall marks of Bohemia, and an absent-minded attitude toward the more exciting of the ten commandments marked artists as a race apart.

WENT TO WAR IN 1914

The day was, when the artist was not thought highly of as war material, either by the artist or the warrior. The last and greatest fracas changed all that, and it is not strange to find that Forbes was among the first of thousands of artists in England to join. The Summer of 1914 found him in the Tenth Royal Fusiliers as a private, and later commissioned in the machine gun corps. He was wounded twice, and twice mentioned in dispatches. In 1918, he was recalled to London and transferred to the Canadian forces to paint pictures for Canadian war memorials . . . the happiest reward for valor a good painter could receive. In 1924, he was demobbed with the rank of captain.

So much for Mr. Forbes' environmental influences, or who knows, his influence on his environment. The cohorts of heredity now will be supplied with ammunition.

Forbes' grandfather was a native of Perth, Scotland, who came out to Toronto and established himself as an architect and contractor. His son, Colin Forbes, became a painter and subsequently attained heights which few climb when King Edward and Queen Alexandra sat for him.

WON MANY HONORS

Kenneth Forbes, son to an artist and grandson to an architect, was born in Toronto some forty years ago, and went to the public schools there and in Westmount, Quebec. This environmental influence seems not to have caught particularly well, for he turned up at tender age at the Newlyn Art School. While there, he won a four-year scholarship in the Hospital Art School at Arbroath, Scotland, and moved on from there to the famous Slade School, London. Later, he won the William Chase Scholarship, and attained the London New Art School from whence he exhibited a portrait on the line at the Royal Academy in August, 1914. "On the line" at the Royal Academy Show means that a picture is placed where the visitor may view it without dislocating his neck.

In spite of the diversions of war, and his other belligerent, if more personal pursuits, Forbes found time to complete three other pictures which were accepted by the Royal Academy. One of those now hangs in the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, and another was selected by the jury to represent England in an international exposition held in the United States.

To add further complexities to another complex subject, Forbes is both a landscape and portrait painter, and an amazingly fluent worker in either field. The illustrations of his work shown here attest this fact without unnecessary elaboration, and should anyone feel a desire to question the writer's sweeping assertion, let him study seriously the drawing of the hands in both portraits.

WANTS TO REMAIN CANADIAN

Considering his background, it is not in the least surprising that Forbes' paintings should be so forceful and direct, or that he should have such a liking for sumptuous coloring. Even in the black reproductions, this quality is evident in both the portrait of Col. Melville Miller, U.S. Cavalry, and that of the artist's wife.

In common with most of the artists working in Canada today, one of Forbes' cardinal desires is to remain a Canadian in Canada, and to reannounce the seductive offers which his talents have brought him from the States. Fortunately, he is numbered among those Canadian artists whose work has sufficiently impressed both buyers and critics in England and New York for him to be accorded something of the respect in Canada which is, as a rule, reserved for the visiting, expensive portrait painter from abroad.

Strangely enough, Forbes is not a modernist, and although he has, more or less, retired as a boxer, his battling nature finds some nourishment in his contemplation of the work of the more modernistic group. But this is fair enough and need cause neither of them prolonged sorrow, since both are among those who have brought distinction to Canada through the appreciation won for their abilities in other countries, and so doing will help bring to Canadians an enhanced and badly needed appreciation of her own.

The lactometer is a special form of hydrometer used for determining the specific gravity of milk, for the purpose of detecting adulteration with water.

Will Paint at World's Fair

Faith Bennett Wins Distinction of Being Courageous Actress

By BOB McSTAY
Central Press Canadian Writer

It has been unanimously agreed that Faith Bennett, who is playing in "The Pride of the Force," a new British picture, shall be awarded the palm for distinguished conduct in the face of the camera. It is certain that not one girl in a million would have uncomplainingly endured the ordeal she suffered in the cause of this film. She allowed a live mouse to run up her leg from ankle to knee, not once but several times while an important scene was being enacted.

Anything for a laugh is the studio motto and it was agreed that the scene would be extremely funny, but all declared that the terror in which the fair sex is always thrown by mice would prevent the filming. An imitation mouse was at first decided upon, but the cameramen were doubtful of success, so Faith agreed to play the scene with a real one. Still dreading the experience, the English girl stipulated that the mouse be a tame one that "wouldn't run wild." Without flinching, the heroine kept her word to abstain from hysterics, but had to play the scene three times before the cameramen were satisfied. If the mere male does not appreciate such heroism, ask the ladies what they think about it!

First of the British pictures to score an overwhelming success in Canada was "Sunshine Susie." A sparkling cinematic musical comedy, it is still remembered by picture-goers for its gay and tuneful romance, its delightful melodies and straightforward story. Many would like to see Jack Hulbert and Renate Muller once again in "Sunshine Susie," and so the Gaumont people announce that this will be reissued for general release in July.

Maybe it's love, but Ben Lyon, husband of Bebe Daniels, the star of "42nd Street," has hurried right over to England, and, like his wife, will star in forthcoming British pictures. Miss Daniels, who possesses a splendid singing voice, starts work immediately on two musical films, "The Southern Maid" and "She Wanted Her Man." Her no less popular husband will star in Allan Dawn's production, "I Spy," a romantic comedy in which Ben Lyon portrays a young man mistaken for an international spy. Bebe and Ben will thus be working in the same studio, but in different films. Plans are being made, however, for a production in which both will be starred.

Critic Forecasts Skyscraperless Era in New York

PARIS (UP).—No more skyscrapers for New York, and nothing's to be done about it, according to Albert E. Gallatin, New York art critic, now here to assist in a portrait project for the new American Embassy.

"There will be no more skyscrapers built in New York for another generation," Gallatin said, "but there already are enough to last that length of time, and maybe things will have changed in another decade and we shall be wanting something different."

Gallatin is on the Paris section of the Paris Chancellery Portrait committee and has, himself, donated a copy of Gilbert Stuart's portrait of his great-grandfather, Albert Gallatin, American Minister to France in the time of Louis XVIII.

"Nearly forty pictures are required in all," he said. "Twelve already are in possession of the committee and ten others have been promised definitely. Descendants have been difficult to find in some instances."

Productions Are Rapidly Closing

NEW YORK (UP).—Productions are closing rapidly with the advent of Summer. Few new plays are scheduled and the chief activity at present is bringing back recent plays for return engagements. Elmer Rice's "Councellor-at-Law," with Paul Muni, is playing its third engagement here, the musical political satire "Of Thee I Sing" has dropped in from the road for a couple of weeks, and John Golden has brought back his early season success, "When Ladies Meet." "Both Your Houses," the Maxwell Anderson play, had to leave town the week it was awarded the Pulitzer prize because of a contract to play at Philadelphia. After that engagement, it may be expected back here for a time to cash in on its honors.

Jacob Epstein's "Primeval Gods" Creating Sensation

LONDON.—Jacob Epstein's "Primeval Gods," the five-ton sculpture, seven feet by six and a half feet, is creating something of a sensation in London and shocking the "Philistines." The artist has been working on it intermittently since 1910. It is on view at the Leicester Galleries, where Epstein's "Genesis" drew shocked thousands at the last show.

"Primeval Gods," a centrepiece, in two vast cemented slabs of Hoptonwood stone, is carved in deep relief on two sides—one with a male and two infant figures, and the other with the spread-eagled male figure known as the Sun God. It could be better judged in a park or on a building.

Epstein, master of plastic sculpture, was born in New York, of Russian-Polish parents, and is fifty-three years of age. He resides in London.

Should Put Greek Words of Art in Original Settings

MONTREAL.—Greek words of art in foreign galleries should be returned to their original setting to bring out their true beauty and glory in the opinion of E. Maillard, principal of the Ecole des Beaux Arts, of this city. The blue sky and bright sunshine of Greece, he said, gave to works of art a setting that could not be equalled in any part of the world.

Mr. Maillard, who has just returned from a trip to Greece, where he studied Greek art, states that Greece is today progressing towards a glory that would equal that of the past, and urges Greeks to retain their ancient traditions, and think with pride of their birthplace.

Special Part Is Written

VIENNA (NANA).—A part has been specially written for Mme. Jeritza, the blonde and beautiful Austrian prima donna, who hitherto has sung leading roles in grand opera, in Franz Lehar's new operetta, "Giuditta." The composer has caused a mild sensation by saying he will have no waltz in "Giuditta." The scene is laid in Italy, and in recognition of this compliment Mussolini has remitted the royalties on a production of his "Napoleon" play at Vienna to a fund in aid of unemployed Viennese actors and actresses. "Giuditta" will have its first production in Vienna next January.

Vienna is doing all it can for its unemployed. The municipal baths, recently improved and enlarged to accommodate 50,000 persons, will issue 60,000 free tickets to people out of work.

Sir Landon Ronald Conducts Orchestra

LONDON (CP).—Part of the celebration of the jubilee of the Royal College of Music was a college orchestra concert which was attended by the King and Queen, and was conducted by Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Dan Godfrey and Dr. Adrian Boult—all noted musicians and old students of the Royal College of Music. Sir Landon Ronald is principal of the Guildhall School of Music and conductor of the New Symphony Orchestra, formerly the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra. He was a violinist in the College Orchestra forty-five years ago. Sir Dan Godfrey is Director of Music to the Corporation of Bournemouth. Dr. Adrian Boult is music director of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

BUYS NEW CANVASES

Lionel Atwill Buys an Art Treasure With Every New Film Contract

By MOLLIE MERRICK
Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD, Calif.—One of the most interesting art collections in this country is being started in a very novel fashion. Every time Lionel Atwill makes a picture he buys a picture. Established in Hollywood as the king of horror films—although he has played numerous other roles—he has infringed on that ground for some time held sacred to Boris Karloff. It has been a vastly different field of endeavor from anything he had done in his brilliant career in the theatre, but whenever his friends have mentioned that fact he has smiled mysteriously and said, "Oh, I'm delighted to make pictures in the interest of art."

Now the secret is out. Every time Atwill makes a movie he buys a rare canvas. When he made "Doctor X," it was Raeburn's "Lady With a Shawl." "Wax Museum" brought an exquisite Lawrence canvas, "Portrait of Miss Baring." In the same way the "Vampire Bat" was concluded and an exquisite seventeenth century portrait from the John Mitchell collection appeared on the staircase of the Atwill house in Hollywood.

I don't think you'd get Lionel Atwill to talk very much about his part in "The Secret of Mme. Blanche," but he'll discuss the merits of George Moreland's "Boy With a Flute," which followed it, plenty. And that deep-dyed villain he played in "Murders in the Zoo" brought on to his drawing-room walls the exquisite beauty and dignity of Gilbert Stuart's "Portrait of a Man." In the same way a Sir Peter Lely "Court Beauty" followed the making of the "Sphinx."

Then Lionel Atwill played the role of the uncle in Marlene Dietrich's latest, and, as yet unreleased, picture, "Song of Songs." And the Atwills were in close conference with Frank Ainslie of the famous galleries. I found it was about Sir Joshua Reynolds' "Girl With a Bird," and, sure enough, the rare Reynolds canvas found an honor place in the steadily mounting collection of the man who "makes pictures for the sake of art."

Flying Fists and Graphic Brush Won Fame for Canadian Artist

Kenneth Forbes, Boxer, Soldier, Portrait and Landscape Painter

EQUALLY potent with brush and fists is a description of Kenneth Forbes, as drawn from an article on the famous Canadian painter, written for Central Press Canadian by Merrill Denison, himself a Canadian literary stalwart. In the layout are shown two samples of Forbes' portrait work for which he has achieved international distinction. Left, is shown the "Portrait of my wife." Mrs. Forbes is, incidentally, of considerable distinction herself in art and literary circles. Centre, is a photograph of Kenneth Forbes and on the right, is his painting of Capt. Melville Miller, U.S. cavalry and president of the Amateur Arts League. While Forbes' portraits are not inferior to his landscapes, perhaps an even more interesting side to the man is the fact that boxing gave him his early claim to fame. During his athletic days leading into the great war in which he served, he won twenty-seven out of thirty-five fights by knockouts.

Satirical Treatment Of Writers Creates Unusual Stage Play

By JACK GAVER
United Press Drama Editor.

NEW YORK (UP).—The writing and publishing of books are dealt with in "Best Sellers," and, as viewed in this play, both are rather dubious and chancy occupations.

This mildly satirical treatment of the people who write and publish comes from the French play, "Vient de Paraitre," by Edouard Bourdet in an adaptation by Dorothy Cheston Bennett. Whatever it may have been in the original, it is revealed here as a play with an excellent first act and second and third acts which do not maintain the pace.

However, the shortcomings of the script, and they are not too serious, are compensated for by the work of a fine cast headed by Ernest Truex and Peggy Wood. Truex, as you might reasonably expect, is again the meek little man, futile, earnest, and with a touch of bravado. Miss Wood, in her second appearance here this season, gives a polished, sincere performance in a role which is not among the best she has had.

Truex is M. Fournier, an employee of the treasury department in Paris, who suddenly finds himself famous as the winner of the Zola literature prize. His victory with his first book is due to the machinations of a publisher, who causes the prize committee to vote against the popular choice for the prize because of a business difference.

The publisher immediately signs up the dazed prize winner for several more books, but, after many months, they are not forthcoming. Fournier, it seems has no imagination whatever; he can't think up plots. His prize winning book was based on a diary kept by his wife before they were married. The publisher, to protect his investment in the author, proposes that the wife start another diary, for which she is to secure interesting material by carrying on an affair with a famous author.

Anxious to keep the prestige they have attained, she accepts the plan unknown to her husband. But a businesslike proposition becomes one of love when she finds herself actually falling in love with the prospective co-respondent. The husband learns the truth of the matter and puts a stop to it, declaring he will never write again and returning to his old treasury post.

The affair finally results in a fruitful manner when Fournier writes a book about it during his spare hours at the treasury, having decided that he is a literary man after all. However, he will never again give up his treasury job, because he finds that is the only place he can write.

Supporting the two stars are George Coulouris, especially good as the publisher; Ian Keith, as the other author; Alan Marshall, Roman Bohnen, and Ralphe Locke. The Shuberts present the play.

THOUSANDS SEEK FAME IN TALKIES

HOLLYWOOD.—Twenty thousand would-be motion picture stars—a column eight miles long—arrive in Hollywood each year, and, after a brief period of discouragement, return home, it is estimated by Fred Datig, casting director at the Paramount studios.

"The casting directors at the various studios interview these 20,000 newcomers each year," Datig says. "These are 'courtesy' interviews in which we try to point out the slim returns to be gained from joining the 17,000 atmosphere players already registered in competition for several hundred jobs a day.

"We register a small percentage—those with stage experience who seem to have personalities that might develop. Eight hundred is the average yearly enrollment. By the time we can give these persons a day's work, we find that one-fourth of them have left the city."

London's Latest Theatre Venture Is Outdoor Play

LONDON.—The presentation of plays at this city's latest theatrical venture, an open-air theatre in Regent's Par, seating 4,000 spectators, will be largely in the hands of a weather prophet. His duty will be to determine each morning whether the play shall be given in the open air or not.

A permanent repertory company, assisted by well-known actors, actresses and producers, will present what Sydney Carroll hopes will be a pastoral festival of entertainment, including pageantry, poetry and music. Parliament has given permission for use of the grounds inside the Inner Circle. Twelve performances a week are planned.

WARMLY PRAISES CANADIAN MUSIC

WINNIPEG (CP).—Urging formation of an operatic society in Winnipeg, adjudicators of Manitoba's fifteenth annual musical festival, three distinguished musicians from Great Britain, warmly praise the standard of music shown by contestants. They expressed much favorable criticism, and were enthusiastic about the steady improvement being shown in music in Canada.

Adolescent singing received special commendation from the adjudicators, Dr. J. Frederick Staton, of Chesterfield, Eng., making his third visit in this capacity to Canada; George Dodds, Newcastle, and York Bowen, London. They recently adjudicated at festivals in Victoria and Vancouver.

Marked improvement has taken place since his last visit, said Dr. Staton. School brass bands in Canada, he said, were superior to anything heard in the United Kingdom. The highest marks awarded in the festival, a mark given only twice since the adjudicators reached Canada, were awarded in the class for operatic solos, female voices.

MARX BROTHERS PLAN FUN FILM

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Those mad Marxes apparently couldn't stand the idea of other comedians acting in the story they worked on so long at Paramount.

The studio hums with the news they have signed to come back and make "Duck Soup," formerly "Cracked Ice," starting early in June. As New York wires say nothing of other pictures, the Katz deal presumably still holds good.

All the brothers will be back here before long. Harpo leaves New York Monday, and Groucho, Chico and Zeppo follow three days later.

The story was practically ready to shoot when the foursome left Paramount, so there will be little preliminary work.

Here's a bit of news. Leo McCarey, who has directed Eddie Cantor and several of the better comedians, will guide the new Marx opus to the screen.

ONE CONSOLATION

The old gentleman was paying a visit to a distant relation. For the whole of the afternoon he had submitted to the attentions of his hostess' young son, but at last he began to grow tired of having his whiskers pulled and his toes trodden on.

"Madam," he said, as he was about to depart, "there is one thing about your charming young son which especially pleases me."

"And what is that?" asked the smiling mother.

Shakespeare Memorial

The Statue of William Shakespeare by Lord Ronald Gower Is Seen Here Before Being Placed in Front of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon, England.

Il Duce Turning Author

ROME (NANA).—There will be a good deal of the Fascist in Julius Caesar as that great Roman will appear in Mussolini's new play.

On several occasions, it seems, when reading Caesar's story and visiting the Forum, the inspiration has come to the Duce to glorify the genius of the victorious general in a manner befitting Fascist ideals and endeavors. Though Caesar will not wear a black shirt, he will be a Fascist for all that.

Mussolini has pondered much on his conception of Caesar's life and death and he will follow the plan he adopted for his Napoleon play, working at the situations himself and leaving a good proportion of the dialogue to Signor Forzano, his collaborator.

The play is to be finished before 1936 and will be one of the features of the intellectual Olympic organized to take place at the same time as the sporting Olympics in Germany in that year.

The German actor, Werner Krauss, will probably play the part of Caesar when the play is presented. Krauss has just paid the Duce a flying visit to inquire about the progress of the new drama.

Rinehart Book Is Mystery

NEW YORK (NANA).—It is never necessary to say much about a book that comes from Mary Roberts Rinehart. There is now "The Album," a fine volume from Farrar & Rinehart—the Rinehart happens to be Stanley, her son—with maps on the inside cover, and we heartily recommend the mystery story. Also from Farrar & Rinehart is Upton Sinclair's short work, "The Way Out—Letters to Perry." It is, of course, a castigation of capitalism . . . probably few people know anything about the siege of Pittsburgh. It happened, however, and in a Putnam book, "The Judas Tree," Neil H. Swanson tells lucidly about it. Melinda Jenkins and her gambler husband follow an old trail in "Gambler's Wife," as told to Jesse Lilienthal, a Houghton Mifflin book. It is excellent.

RARE SCARAB IS PRESERVED

HAVERFORD, Pa. (UP).—A scarab which King Tutankamon's grandfather gave friends attending his wedding about 1400 B.C., is the season's most important archaeological discovery of the Haverford College expedition to Beth Shemesh, according to Dr. Elihu Grant, leader of the group.

The scarab was carved from Egyptian limestone in the shape of the beetle, emblem of life and good fortune, and measures three and a quarter inches long and two and a quarter wide.

Dr. Grant explained that the scarab was carved in commemoration of the wedding of Amenhotep III, grandfather of the wife of Tutankamon and Queen Taiy. He said he thought Queen Taiy was a foreigner, possibly of the Egyptian race, but from Phoenicia.

Several marriage scarabs have been found in Egypt, he said, but it is interesting and significant to find one in Palestine.

NOVARRO IS CAST IN LAUGHING PLAY

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—The endless wanderings of Director W. S. Van Dyke are soon to start again.

With some final work still to be done on "Eskimo," Van went into a huddle yesterday with Associate Producer Hunt Stromberg and came away with the assignment to direct Ramon Novarro in the long-postponed Oliver La Farge novel, "Laughing Boy."

The story, which Universal sold after months of casting difficulties, will be Novarro's first under his new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract. He'll arrive here in June and will start work almost immediately.

While the film calls for location work, it will be the shortest of Director Van Dyke's many journeys. To the man who went to the South Seas to shoot "White Shadows," to Africa to film "Trader Horn," and to Alaska to photograph "Eskimo," a trip to the Navajo country in New Mexico and Arizona will seem like working in his own back yard.

Both he and Producer Stromberg are enthusiastic, however, about the screen possibilities of La Farge's prize novel. They have started a search for an actress to play the Indian heroine.

Complete Murals For Cafe de Paris

HOLLYWOOD—The murals decorating 2,160 square feet of wall space in the Cafe de Paris at Fox Movietone City were completed this week with the addition of canvases of Janet Gaynor and Will Rogers. The work was done under the supervision of Fred Sersen, head of the studio art department, and includes scenes from cities all over the world.

Great Britain and the Dominions Overseas

Lure of Blarney Draws Hundreds To Famed Castle

Death of Over-Venturesome Kisser of Stone Fails to Deter Crowd of Tourists—Owner Frowns on Scheme to Allow Rock to Be Taken on Tour

By CHARLES A. SMITH
Central Press Canadian Writer

CORK, Ireland.—The prospect of kissing the famed Blarney Stone still lures hundreds of tourists to Blarney Castle near here, despite an increased admission price and the tragic death last year of one too venturesome would-be kisser. Villagers at Blarney declared that scores of tourists visited the castle this Easter and that the forthcoming tourist season promises to provide as many visitors as in past years.

PLUNGED TO DEATH

The wide publicity given to the death of the local youth, James Burke, who plunged 150 feet to his death when attempting to kiss the stone unaided last July, does not seem to have scared visitors from the castle, the villagers said.

Burke foolishly tried to kiss the stone without the assistance of the castle's caretaker, the villagers pointed out, and lost his balance. His father sued Sir George Colthurst, the owner of the castle, for $1,500 damages last April, but the court dismissed the action, holding that the younger Burke "voluntarily undertook the peril of accident."

WOMEN PERFORM FEAT

Although the kissing of the stone calls for steady nerves and some acrobatic skill, local people declare the feat is 100 per cent safe with the help of the caretaker, who holds the feet of the kisser as the latter is let down inch by inch over the battlements to the point where the stone is let into the castle wall.

Even women are now performing the feat these days instead of kissing the stone by proxy as they did in former years, it was said, and a goodly proportion of the visitors to the castle at Easter were women, some of whom were assisted down the castle wall by male companions.

WORN TO A POLISH

Countless thousands of lips have worn the stone to an almost polished smoothness in paying tribute to the old belief that kissing the stone brings life-long good luck and a rare measure of eloquence.

Included in the thousands who have climbed to the battlements and been let down the wall to the stone are such famous figures as Winston Churchill, the British statesman; the former Shah of Persia and the Sultan of Muscat.

A few months ago there were reports that several business men were contemplating purchasing the stone and taking it on a tour of the United States and Canada, where it was proposed to charge 50 cents a head for the privilege of kissing it.

AN UNPOPULAR IDEA

The local Irish people didn't think much of the idea, although there were some who sentimentally held that the taking of the stone on tour would help in spreading good will between Ireland and the United States.

Sir George Colthurst declined to accede to the idea, however, and the project fell through.

Had Cold Trip Across Channel Towed by Rope

LONDON (CP).—Captain D'Arcy Rutherford, of London, who has crossed the English Channel from Dover to Calais on a surf boat towed by a speed boat, says he held a tow-rope which was fastened to a speed boat driven about thirteen miles an hour. He reached Calais in an hour and forty minutes.

The time would have been less, but they hit the wash of a big steamer, and several times Captain Rutherford had to lie flat to avoid being thrown over. The cold was intense, as he was wet through and wore only shorts and a sweater.

ORDERS MENTION DEATH OF GOAT

Mascot of First Battalion Welch Regiment Was Presented by His Majesty

LONDON (BUP). — Taffy the Fifth, the goat mascot of the First Battalion, Welch Regiment, is dead.

Taffy's death was announced in Regimental Orders issued at Cardiff by Colonel Linton in the following terms: "The Commanding Officer of the First Welch regrets to announce that the Regimental goat and mascot, Taffy the Fifth, presented by H.M. the King in 1920, died on Thursday at Aldershot."

Taffy came from the Royal goat herd at Windsor Park, and was known all over the world.

On one occasion he mutinied, and it happened on church parade. The battalion was drawn up on the Salamanca parade ground at Aldershot ready for its ceremonial march to the garrison church. Orders were shouted, the band burst into music, and the battalion stepped out—but Taffy quietly lay down, and refused to move.

The battalion had to go to church without Taffy, who was placed under arrest and confined to barracks, but all accusations of sabotage were withdrawn when it was found that the cause of the goat's bad conduct was his devotion to his personal commanding officer, Goat Major Serns, who was not on parade.

HAVE PITY ON THE SEA-SICK

Nautical Science Can Now Measure, If Not Stop, Ship's Vibration

LONDON (BUP). — Victims of sea-sickness who attribute their misfortune to "ship's vibration" have won the pity of nautical science. A formula has now been discovered which will predict exactly how much any particular ship vibrates at sea.

This result has been won by experiments at Cambridge and by a band of "martyrs" to science. These last are the research workers who volunteered to test out their theories on the sea itself, and took their readings manfully on bucking and vibrating cargo ships in the intervals of coma and collapse, since Nature never intended most scientists to be sailors.

The formula which has crowned their labors was expounded in all its intricacy to the North-East Coast Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Newcastle by Dr. F. H. Todd, of the National Laboratory, Teddington.

SECRET OF METHOD

He explained that the secret of the new method, which replaces the highly uncertain ones so far available, is to treat the ship's structure as a beam, and add the calming effect of the water around it as if it were an additional weight muffling the ship's vibrations. A formula has been found for expressing this calming effect, and now, with a full knowledge of the ship's structure, the vibration to be expected with any load can be calculated within ten hours.

Unfortunately, science has still failed to find a way of making the ship behave quietly.

HIS MAJESTY IS CONGRESS PATRON

LONDON (CP).—The King has consented to be patron of the 13th Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire, to take place in London during the first week in July. The congress, which will be inaugurated by the Prime Minister at the Guildhall on Monday, July 3, meets triennially. This year's gathering, over which Sir Arthur Shirley Benn will preside, will be the first opportunity afforded to commercial and industrial representatives of the Empire to discuss together, from the practical standpoint, the results of the Ottawa Conference. Preparatory committees have already been set up to make preliminary investigations into such subjects as monetary policy, customs restrictions, and communications and transport.

The Duke of York will be the guest of honor at the official congress banquet.

Wild Flower Protection Problem in the Old Country Now

MANCHESTER, England (CP).—How to protect the wild flowers of the United Kingdom is a problem being considered by the Wild Plant Conservation Board in connection with the Council for the Preservation of Rural England. Alarm is expressed at the rapid rate at which many of even the commonest of Britain's wild flowers are definitely disappearing in many parts of the country.

The board feels that it is by education rather than by drastic legislation that a solution is to be reached. Nevertheless legislation was necessary in cases of wilful depredation, and they are of opinion that it would help considerably if the existing county by-law for protection of wild flowers and plants could be so extended as to be applicable to private property as well as to property to which the public has access. While not more than four or five native species of flora had actually become extinct in Britain during the last two centuries, there was trustworthy evidence that nearly 300 different kinds had disappeared from some localities or had even become extinct throughout one or more of the counties of England.

Popular Despite Tragedy

HERE is Ireland's famous Blarney Stone, showing a visitor leaning over to kiss the famous stone that is supposed to bring good health. Only recently a youth who attempted to kiss the stone without being held by the guard, fell 150 feet down the hole to his death. But that has in no way impaired the popularity of Blarney.

Secrets of Budget Kept Inviolate by Men of No Renown

Never Yet Known an Instance of Breach of Faith —Interior Decorating at the Zoo—Bow Bells Will Be Heard Again

By OLANVILLE CAREW

LONDON (BUP).—Budget Day! For weeks past people have been praying to their private gods to move the heart of the Chancellor in favor of their particular interests—something on the lines of simultaneous and conflicting prayers to Heaven for rain by those who want it, and for fine weather by those who don't.

No one knew until the Chancellor of the Exchequer had made his Budget Speech to an overflowing house just what our financial future for the coming year would be. Well, not quite "no one."

UNDER OATH OF SECRECY

The manuscript of the Budget is sent to a secret place twenty-four hours in advance. It is set up, and a strictly limited number of copies is run. They are counted and re-counted. The very trial pull is burnt instantly. And then, and then only, and just after the Chancellor has sat down, are they dispatched under heavy seal to the House for distribution to members.

In spite of the fact that the men, unhonored and unsung, have, at times, information in their possession politically and financially beyond price, there has never yet been an instance of breach of faith.

HISTORY REPEATING

Speaking of budgets, every one seems to think that every budget, come year go year, is quite remarkable in that it is presented in circumstances which have not existed before, and so on.

That is not so. Take this little extract from what Macaulay wrote as long ago as 1830 and remember that the world conditions of that time, a century ago, stood in just about the same relation to the Napoleonic wars which had ended fifteen years before at Waterloo as our do to the Great War which ended fifteen years ago in 1918. Thus wrote Macaulay:

"The present moment is one of great distress. But how small will that distress appear when we think over the history of t he last forty years; a war compared with which all other wars sink into insignificance; taxation such as the most heavily taxed people of former times could not have conceived; a debt larger than all the public debts that ever existed in the world added together."

And when he went on to compare the conditions of that year—1830—with those of 1720, and wondered what people in that former day would have said had they been told that a time would come when the annual revenue would be more than the principal of the debt of other days.

Everything has been multiplied at a much higher rate between 1830 and 1933—and still we go on. So no doubt we shall be talking in much the same strain when the year 2033 shall come.

DECORATING IN THE ZOO

In a city of such gigantic dimensions as London there must be many more ways of getting a living than some of us would guess. Also some that in any case we would not choose, as for instance, that of a certain artist who has taken on a few weeks' job of interior decorating. This hero has contracted to touch up the scenic effects of some of the dens in the zoo. He is to start with the residence of the crocodiles—and if he does not do some involuntary interior decorating, he will afterwards turn his attention to brightening the lives of the reptiles.

Thirteen huge "crocs" will watch him while he paints on their drawing-room walls a picture to remind them of their native Nile. They will, literally, be "fed up to the teeth" to keep them lazy if not amiable. When—and if—that job is completed, he will go to the dens of poisonous snakes, but the inmates will be removed. Pythons will be shut off by roller shutters, but there is one tenant, a twelve-foot gharial—who cannot be isolated. So she will be enveloped in a net, and a keeper will stand by. I should think that painter would also stand by, ready to "cut the painter," and run.

A Cockney is defined as he or she who was born within the sound of Bow Bells. That being so, no Cockneys have been born for several years, because not only has the church tower in which the bells were hung been deemed dangerous until lately, but the bells themselves have had to be silent until the tower and the church were reconditioned. Also the bells have had to be recast.

And now we are to hear them again and the Great Bell of Bow and its companions will sound once more for any modern Dick Whittington who will listen.

The bells of Bow will be old, yet new. The peal which is now to sound is recast from their predecessors which were cast 300 years ago. Those in turn had been made from the original peal of the eleventh century. The metal which will ring now in 1933 is the very same as that which rang more than 800 years ago.

And, by the way, Bow Church is not at Bow but in Cheapside in the very heart of the City of London. It is built upon bows—which means arches.

ALL CRIMINALS NOT ABNORMAL

No Statistics Available to Show Results of Psycho-Therapy

LONDON (BUP).—Comments on the theory that psycho-therapy can cure many recidivists and most first offenders are given in the Prison Commissioners' report for 1931.

The Medical Commissioner, Dr. W. Norwood East, observes that no statistics are available to show how many law-breakers in this country have had their criminal careers checked by psycho-therapy.

"As far as I am aware," he says, "no medical psycho-therapeutist has any extensive experience in this method of dealing with crime. Neither is it to be assumed that the prisoner who commits a crime as the result of an abnormal mental state is amenable to psycho-therapy because another individual with similar compulsions has been so relieved.

NOT A DISEASE

"It is a travesty," he adds, "to suggest that crime is a disease. But it is clearly the result sometimes of a neurotic disorder. A parade of abstract conceptions and unwarranted assumptions, however, creates hostility and delays progress where practical issues are important. The problem is to ascertain how many law-breakers are genuine when they declare that they desire to be cured of the pathological condition associated with the crime and how many of these can be treated with success."

Dr. East believes that a scientific investigation at a penal institution, recording failures and successes, is much to be desired.

The statistical side of the report shows that out of 46,800 people over the age of sixteen found guilty of indictable offences during 1931, 15,482—or about 33 per cent—were sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude, or Borstal detention.

LIQUOR LAW OFFENCES

Offences against the intoxicating liquor laws accounted for 48 per cent of the imprisonments of women and 16 per cent of men. Actually there were 2,910 "receptions" of men and 1,851 of women known to have been in prison before, and the commissioners make this comment:

"Many of these people are known to come into prison two or three times, and some of them nine or ten times, in the course of a year. It is probable, therefore, that a stage army of 700 or 800 men and 400 or 500 women accounts for these 2,910 and 1,851 'receptions.'"

During the last twenty years the number of convictions for drunkenness has decreased considerably, but prison authorities cannot cope with the very high percentage of recidivism among one little group of women.

A SMALL PERCENTAGE

The commissioners point out that persons convicted of serious crimes form only a small percentage of the total number sent to prison. Indeed, during the year, out of every 100 "receptions" of men, only fifteen were due to crimes sufficiently serious to entail sentences of over three months. The corresponding figures for women was nine.

The number of persons imprisoned for house-breaking showed an increase of 235 over the previous year, and the number for false pretences an increase of 170.

Install Shrine in Railway Station

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (CP).—The new railway station of this city is probably the only station in the British Empire, outside of India, equipped with a shrine for the "faithful."

An inner room has a praying mat on the floor and a shower bath has been installed so that the "faithful" who enters may perform his ablutions before he enters to pray.

As a result "Allah Ho Akbar" ("God Is Great") is now intoned in the station before the pious Muslim leaves on a train journey.

Bluebell Time in Britain

Economic Parley Is Changing Programme Of London Hostesses

Two Thousand Foreign Visitors Expected During World Conference Which Will Open in the Latter Part of June

By PIERRE J. HUSS
Central Press Canadian Writer

LONDON.—Fashionable and commercial London hail the World Economic Conference with undisguised enthusiasm. A golden harvest of profit is anticipated by the big hotels, and the presence of hundreds of distinguished foreign visitors during the early Summer will keep Mayfair "at home" instead of elsewhere for the Summer. Elaborate social programmes are already being planned by Mayfair hostesses.

GAIETY AND COLOR

With the King formally opening the conference and social functions anticipated both at Buckingham and St. James Palaces in honor of the delegates, a rich mixture of gaiety and color will course through the more serious pattern of the international gathering.

Resplendent military and diplomatic dress is expected to be in full evidence. Most embassies and legations will have "open house" at least some time during the conference.

The annual Continental holiday of many prominent Mayfair hostesses has been postponed indefinitely, in order that they may be present to entertain the distinguished visitors.

HOTEL MEN'S HOPE

A conservative estimate by businessmen is that delegates and their families will bless the hopeful hotel coffers with nothing less than $500,000 before the conference has reached the end of July, and that another $500,000 will be spent in that time by the visitors in various ways.

A middle-aged Austrian, Herr Hersly, is already in London to arrange for accommodations here. He is the League of Nations expert on planning, producing and housing international conferences.

There are about 3,500 first-class hotel rooms in the West End of London a brief distance from the new Geological Museum building at South Kensington, where the conference is to be held.

GROUPED BY COUNTRIES

According to Herr Hersly, each country is to group its delegates in one hotel for the sake of convenience.

It is estimated that the conference will quarter some 2,000 foreign visitors in London for a period of six weeks or more. The spacious quarters of the Royal Geographical Society in Kensington Gore will probably be turned into a club for the delegates.

ONLY FOUR CABS LEFT IN LONDON

LONDON—London will celebrate this Summer the centenary of the hansom cab. Once the most popular of vehicles in which to move about the city, there are but four now left upon the streets of London. Gasoline and the building of the taxicab spelt the knell of the hansom.

Thirty years ago there were 7,000 hansoms in London alone. Built for two passengers, and with the driver in a "dickey" at the back, the reins passing over the roof of the cab, the hansom was in its day considered the smartest thing upon the streets. The drivers, arrayed in melton coat, with buttonhole, tall hat and beribboned whip, were as witty as those of the contemporary horse-drawn omnibuses. There was a spice of danger attached to riding in a hansom (which doubtless made their use all the more agreeable to the adventurous) for if the horse did come down it was likely as not that with the cab pitching forward and the doors flying open the occupants would be thrown into the street.

Nowadays the four remaining hansoms in London ply quite a fair trade around the West End amongst those who remember the old days. A full-sized hansom cab—taken off the streets, as it were—was placed a few years ago in the British Museum.

Royal Visitors Inspect Huge Plane

THE wheels of the forty-two-seater passenger airliners on the London-Paris service are far bigger than the little grandsons of the Emir of Katsina, shown standing beside one of them. The little boys, Lamba and Nagoge, visited Croydon aerodrome with their grandfather and his suite. During their visit to London they called on the King.

WORKERS TO SHARE WITH UNEMPLOYED

Experiment to Be Made by Miners of Colliery in Wales

SAFEGUARDS TO BE KEPT BY SHARING

BLAENAVON, Wales (BUP).—For two years—in some cases more—about 800 miners have been unemployed at Blaenavon, while double that number have been at work. Now, subject to the approval of the management, a great experiment will probably be made of sharing the work at the collieries among the 2,400 men.

The history of this movement is, briefly: Eight or nine weeks ago the 1,600 men employed were balloted on the question as to whether they would be prepared to share the work. Forty-one per cent replied in the affirmative, but as there was no majority the matter was allowed to drop temporarily.

DECISION RESCINDED

On a requisition of twelve miners, that decision has been rescinded, and, if the management agree to the experiment, a new ballot will be taken which, it is officially believed, will show an overwhelming majority in favor of sharing.

It is not only a question of helping the unemployed directly by providing work—it is computed that under present conditions the scheme will mean eight months' work out of twelve for all the miners in the area—but all manner of other problems are involved.

It will mean that in future no miners at Blaenavon will be in receipt of transitional benefits under the unemployment scheme, and that none of them will have the dole stopped through lengthy unemployment.

A GREATER BOON

An even greater boon will be that benefits under the National Health Insurance Acts will not lapse.

Under the new regulations, conditionous unemployment robs the miner of medical attention in illness, sickness benefits, maternity benefits, and, in the event of a miner's death, the widow's pension cannot be claimed. By sharing the work, all these "safeguards" will be preserved.

GETS WEALTH THROUGH ART

Antique Dealer's Brilliant Judgment Brings Him Fortune and Title

LONDON (CP).—This month a tall, ruddy Briton will return to England from the United States and take his seat in the House of Lords as the first art dealer to found a noble line. He is Lord (Joseph) Duveen, of Millbank, eldest of fourteen children of a Dutch antique dealer and a Yorkshire woman, whose money gave Britain a new wing to its National Portrait Gallery.

Forty-seven years ago this sixty-four-year-old connoisseur with X-ray eyes started a picture-chasing career that was to make him one of the world's most renowned judges of old masters, friend of contemporary artists, princes and premiers.

STATESMANSHIP AND ART

A stroke of statesmanship two generations before him put Lord Duveen into the art business. His grandfather was a Dutch war-contractor to the King of Saxony. Refusal of Napoleon to honor the Saxon war-debt ruined him, and his son, instead of inheriting a fortune, came to Hull and set up an antique business which fostered and spread to London, Paris and New York.

At 17 Lord Duveen started his career as a runner for his father's firm. Every week he crossed the English Channel in chase of likely works of art. Fourteen years later he bought Hoppner's "Lady Louisa Manners" for $70,250, the highest price ever bid at auction for a single picture up to that time. That was only the start. His highest price for a single picture now stands at $875,000 for the Raphael Madonna. He bought the Randolph Kahn collection in New York for $5,000,000.

MEMENTO OF NOVITIATE

Lord Duveen still treasures a memento of his novitiate as a picture scout, a very bad family portrait he once bought in the belief it was a Gainsborough. The mistake gave him a maxim he still often utters: "A thing is not good just because it is old."

Since then he has never bought in haste. If he likes a picture or a piece of sculpture he takes a second look. If his reaction to it the second time is less strong than at first glance he rejects it. If he feels its beauty more strongly, he buys. He turns down works by old masters if he does not think they are up to the mark. "Even Jove nodded, you know," he says.

His friends expect that before his career ends he will top the $1,000,000 mark for a single work.

POOR TOMMY!

From the bedroom of the twin boys came the mingled sounds of loud weeping and hearty laughter, so father went up to investigate.

"What's the matter up here?" he inquired.

"Nothing," he chuckled, "only nurse has given Tommy two baths, and I haven't had any."

What's New and Interesting for the Women

"Inventor" Of Shingle Cut Found

A woman of seventy-two, who recently celebrated her golden wedding at Brighton, claims she invented the shingle fifty years ago.

"I was on the stage at the time and had to play a male part," she said, "so one day in 1883 I decided that I would be realistic and have my hair cut short. When I told my hairdresser to cut my hair as short at the back as he would for a man, he seemed to think I had gone mad. But he did what I told him, and I had it closely curled on top. Many women admitted they admired my new style of hairdressing and would like to copy it, but none of them dared do that for fear of what their husbands would say!"

Striped Colored Umbrellas Craze With Oxford Men

The latest undergraduate fashion in Oxford is the revival of the umbrella. This is not the usual sober black affair, but a gaily colored creation of dazzling hues. The most popular design is either in wide stripes or in futuristic jazz design, while the "last word" is one which matches your shirt.

It is said the new craze is the Oxford man's retort to the recent efflorescence of beach pyjamas among women undergraduates.

Save the Pieces!

By HANNAH

BUT they don't look made over, do they?

Even though the combination of materials and the new puff sleeves hint that perhaps it is just an old dress gone modern, there is something about each one that is decidedly chic.

It is that neckline finish. The sleeve and yoke treatment is rather obvious. New material for puff sleeves and yoke on the top dress is a contrasting check on plain material, and the yoke line of the new blouse follows the yoke line of the old skirt. The little flower ornament at the neck gives just the right finish and is made of the old sleeves and blouse, four or five layers of the material pinked around the edges.

The dress at the lower left was worn out at the elbows. New material is used for the three-quarter-length odd sleeves and the bodice top of the blouse, leaving most of the old blouse as it was. Here again it is the neckline treatment which is pert. Eyelets on either side of the high closing and a tie of self material make it possible to get in and out of the frock with minimum damage to the curls.

At the right is a simple and becoming way to go short-sleeved. The originator of this style just didn't like dark material so close to her face, and so the blouse top with its cap sleeves was a flattering solution. The bow of dark material from the body of the frock just follows the trend which decrees bows for all ages. This is a style which can be used to advantage in making sleeveless formals into frocks for more general wear.

Laundress and Dress Designer Are Essential

What to wear for Ascot is a problem occupying many feminine minds at the moment. Silk, satin, lace and cotton will all be used for Ascot creations, and they are being starched as stiff as a man's white collar.

"One must be a laundress as well as a dress designer to get the new Ascot effect," a Bond Street dress designer said recently. "Chiffon, which should coil and swirl round a woman's figure like the seven veils, has to be put in the starch pot and made as stiff and unmanageable as a piece of wire gauze.

"If soft materials are used, they must be worn over a ruffled petticoat, which sometimes has in it as much as fourteen yards of muslin. Then, if that is not starchy enough, a long boa of stiffened organdie is added to complete the costume. It takes twenty-four yards to make a really good one."

To protect the wallpaper from the wet cloth when cleaning woodwork, use a flat piece of tin, about a foot long, moving it along the wall against the board as the work progresses. An old auto license plate is excellent for this purpose.

Chill-horseradish sauce is nice for fish. Combine one-half cup chili sauce, two teaspoons horseradish, a bit of Worcestershire sauce with one-half cup mayonnaise.

Popular Printed Chiffons

Softness and Dainty Colors Suited to Spring and Summer Evenings

PRINTED chiffon dresses always are popular for evening wear at this time of the year. Their softness and dainty colors seem particularly suited for Spring and early Summer.

In all the Paris collections many printed chiffons were shown. Two of them are sketched here, the one at the left showing the wide-shouldered effect that is essential to smartness.

For evening dresses this effect is obtained in a number of ways, one of which is ruffled trimming. In this Chanel frock a mass of frills goes around the armholes and forms a cape in the back. The chiffon is in a small red design on a brown background. The new features are narrow panels in the skirt, and pointed, shirred sections around the hips.

One of Bianchini's prettiest designs is used for the Molyneux evening frock sketched at right. The pattern is of clouds in pink and grey with little black birds. Here again is a new evening skirt, in a wide flounce full from the knees down.

Flowers have reached a new high spot in trimming importance and are approved both for daytime and evening. The flowers which decorate this frock are in the same shade as the chiffon.

In cottons, dotted Swiss, organdie, plain, printed, plaided and embroidered, are all used for party dresses.

To prevent sausages from breaking and shrinking in the frying pan, boil them about eight minutes before frying, or roll them in flour before frying.

Pour boiling water over hard shell clams and let them stand for two or three minutes and they will open easily.

Strictly Tailored

This vegetable dinner is very tasty served on grill plates. Use grill plates frequently in warm weather. It saves dish washing and is very popular.

RECIPES

Rice Goulash—One cup rice, 1 lb. hamburg, two large onions, one large can vegetable soup, one heaping tablespoon lard. Cook rice in salted water until done. Fry hamburg and onions in lard until well done. Add vegetable soup and rice to meat. Salt and pepper to taste. Cook ten or fifteen minutes.

Cracked Wheat Hot Cakes—Three and one-fourth cups water, one cup cracked wheat, pinch of salt, one egg. Flour enough to make batter. Cook wheat in salted water for twenty minutes. Cool. Beat egg, adding it to cooked wheat. Then add flour enough to make batter (not too thin). Fry in deep fat until crispy brown. Delicious with maple syrup. To save time in the morning you can cook your wheat the night before.

Strawberry Puffs—Six egg whites, two cups granulated sugar, one teaspoon maple flavor, one tablespoon vinegar. Beat egg whites very stiff. Add flavoring. Add vinegar and sugar gradually. Beat until grains of sugar are dissolved. Drop on pan covered with oil paper and bake in a very slow oven (250 to 300 degrees) one hour. This amount will make enough to serve fourteen or fifteen people. To serve, lift off the top and fill with crushed strawberries. Put whipped cream and a sprinkle of nuts on top.

Woman Leaves Court With Good Character

LONDON (CP).—"You leave the court without a stain on your character." An Old Bailey jury acquitted Annie Binks (49), of a charge of bigamy, and said the case ought never have been brought up. Her husband was a seaman, and she heard that he had been killed in the War owing to his ship being torpedoed. She remarried in 1918, and when she heard recently that inquiries were being made about the marriage, she went to the police station

Wedding Breakfast Has Old-Fashioned Charm This Month

By META H. GIVEN

With beautiful flowers and delicious food for a wedding breakfast we strive to express the divine happiness whose outward form is a wedding ceremony. For a June wedding the most delicately colored flowers may be gathered from the bride's own garden for the breakfast table—an old-fashioned bouquet of sweet peas, bright blue bachelor buttons, snapdragons, a few spears of delphiniums and the whole softened by delicate sprays of baby's breath and dainty blue forget-me-nots.

China of mellowed Wedgwood and damask belonging to the bride's mother add to the charm of old-fashioned loveliness.

The menu should be as attractive to the taste as the setting is to the eye. The breakfast menu given here emphasizes creamy colored foods with color accent of red. The strawberry has been used to give color, first as a fruit juice cocktail and at the end of the meal as a garnish for the pineapple sherbet.

In planning a wedding breakfast menu, however, a satisfying meal must be considered as well as color effectiveness.

WEDDING BREAKFAST

Chilled strawberry juice, creamed sweetbreads on toast, tomato caprice salad, fancy sandwiches, pineapple sherbet, garnished with whole strawberries, bride's white cake, bonbons, coffee.

SWEETBREADS ON TOAST

Four pairs of sweetbreads, fifteen mushrooms, quarter cup butter, four tablespoons flour, half teaspoon salt, one and a half cups evaporated milk diluted with one and a half cups boiling water or chicken stock.

Clean and parboil the sweetbreads in salted water for twenty minutes. Remove the veins. Cut the meat into three-quarter-inch dice. Peel mushrooms and chop quite fine. Heat butter in saucepan. Add mushrooms and saute eight or ten minutes. Stir occasionally to cook the mushrooms evenly. Remove mushrooms and add flour to fat remaining in the pan. Stir until smooth. Add salt, diluted milk and stir until thickened and smooth. Add mushrooms and sweetbreads and cook over hot water five minutes. Serve at once. Yield, eight servings.

TOMATO CAPRICE SALAD

Eight medium-sized tomatoes, one cup diced celery, one cup diced apple, half cup blanched almonds, Malden blush mayonnaise, twenty-four asparagus (use fresh cooked asparagus if possible).

Select even-sized very red tomatoes. Hollow out centres, saving the scooped out portion for mayonnaise. Peel and chill. When ready to serve, arrange in nests of crisp lettuce. Fill with celery, apples and almonds that have been first mixed with mayonnaise. Garnish with three asparagus tips. Yield, eight servings.

MAIDEN BLUSH MAYONNAISE

To one cup cooked mayonnaise add one cup tomato pulp (removed from raw tomatoes) half teaspoon salt, two tablespoons orange juice. Whip until smooth.

PINEAPPLE SHERBET

One cup sugar, few grains salt, one cup water, two tablespoons lemon juice, one No. 2 can crushed pineapple (two and a quarter cups), one and a half cups chilled evaporated milk.

Add sugar, salt, water and lemon juice to pineapple. Stir slowly into chilled milk and let stand in refrigerator twenty minutes. Freeze with a mixture of one part salt to six parts chipped ice. Yield, one and a half quarts, twelve servings.

BRIDE'S WHITE CAKE

One and three-quarter cups pastry flour, four teaspoons baking powder, quarter teaspoon salt, half cup fat (half butter, half Crisco), one cup finely granulated sugar, two tablespoons evaporated milk diluted with six tablespoons water, one teaspoon lemon extract, half teaspoon almond extract, half cup egg whites.

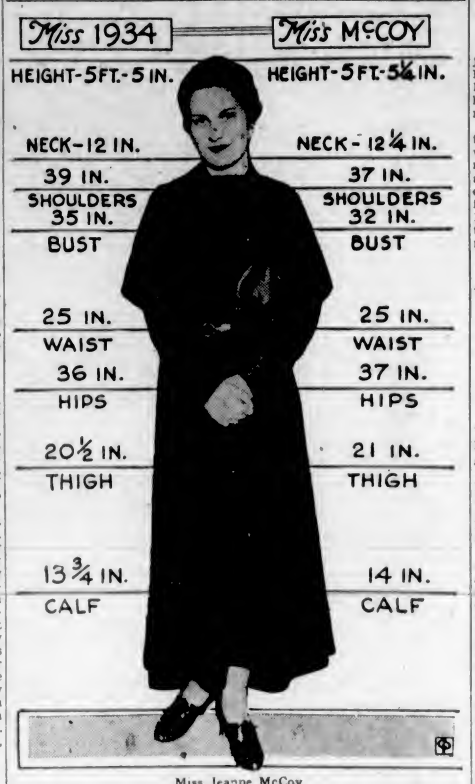

Sift flour, then measure. Resift twice with baking powder and salt. Cream fat until plastic, add sugar gradually and continue creaming until white and smooth. Add dry ingredients and diluted milk alternately beginning and ending with dry ingredients. Then add flavoring. Beat egg whites until stiff, but not until they have lost their shiny appearance. Cut and fold whites carefully into the batter. After cutting and folding, stir batter three or four times. Turn immediately into a square or rectangular pan lined with paraffin paper. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degees F.). Frost with fondant icing. Yield, twelve servings.

In Making Fudge Use Sour Cream

Three cups light brown sugar, one cup sour cream, one cup nutmeats (chopped). Stir cream and sugar until well blended together, then put on fire and cook. Cook until it forms a firm ball (one you can pick up with fingers) when tried in cold water. Put aside and let cool until you can just hold your hand on bottom of pan. If this is allowed to get too cold it won't grain. Then add nutmeats and beat until nearly ready to harden. Turn into buttered pan and mark into squares. You can get the same results by using thick sour milk and adding three tablespoons butter.

Measurements Ideal

Co-ed's Figure Compares Favorably With Standard of 1934

Miss Jeanne McCoy

By LILIAN CAMPBELL

THE Venus of Milo, Greek ideal of womanly beauty, was 5 feet 4 inches in height; her neck was 14 inches around; bust, 34⅞-inches; waist, 28½ inches; hips, 36 inches; calf, 13½ inches, and ankle, 8½ inches.

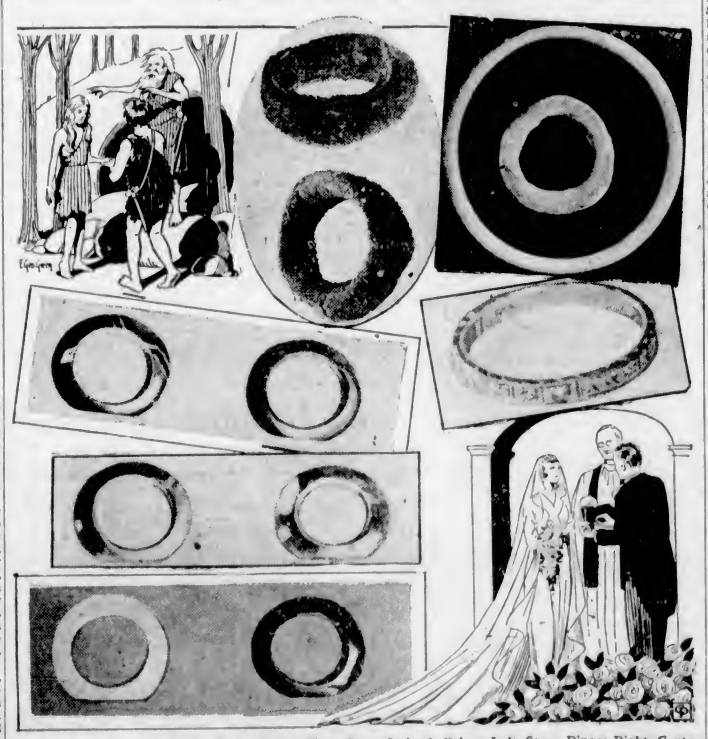

The pulchritude standard for 1934, as set by 32,000 American beauticians recently, is: Height, 5 feet 5 inches; neck, 12 inches; shoulders, 39 inches; bust, 35 inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 37 inches; thigh, 20½ inches; calf, 13¾ inches.

Miss Jeanne McCoy, co-ed of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., is pictured. Her measurements, as compared with the 1934 ideal and Venus, read: Height, 5 feet 5¼ inches; neck, 12¼ inches; shoulders, 37 inches; bust, 35 inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 37 inches; thigh, 21 inches; calf, 14 inches.

Bride's Ring Symbolizes Oneness

Endlessness Means Eternal Love

(Copyright, 1933, Central Press Canadian)

Fashions in jewelry come and go, but the love of rings goes on forever. From time immemorial rings have been a symbol of power and confidence.

How long rings have been considered a necessity for weddings is unknown. Tradition states that the first wedding ring was made of iron and adamant—the iron signifying lastingness and the adamant perfect concord. The early Romans used a plain iron ring.

The gold wedding ring typifies refined purity of love; its endlessness promises eternal affection; its roundness suggests the encircling round of love, and its completeness stands for the couple's oneness.

To the superstitious, if the wedding ring is lost it is a warning that the husband's love will soon pass away; if broken, that he soon will die.

It has not always been worn on the third finger of the left hand. Time was when it adorned the right hand. It is said, however, that the reason it now is worn on the left hand and on that particular finger is that the finger, being the weakest, symbolizes the wife's dependence on her husband. The Egyptians also believed that this finger was connected directly with the heart by a vein called the "vena amoris."

The first rings probably were crude circles cut from pieces of stone. In primitive times rings were made of leather from the skins of wild animals. Two such odd rings are pictured. Doubtless the bride of this remote period took no less pride in her wedding rings than her modern sisters who would disdain other than gold or platinum, often studded with diamonds, as is the one shown in the picture. One of the oldest forms of rings was laboriously cut from agate to form a circlet.

LOVE OF RINGS INHERENT

From thousands of years of acquaintanceship with rings and association with their symbols, the love of rings has become inherent. No other form of jewelry is so esteemed or considered so necessary a part of everyday life. Some years ago, when the supply of diamonds seemed to be insufficient to supply the demand for engagement rings, there was a genuine fear of a diamond famine, so important a role does the diamond bear in celebrating this occasion.

Rings have never been so universally worn as in our complicated modern life. The best talent of designers in Europe and America is engaged in creating them. And the world is ransacked for the most beautiful gems for enriching them.

Why Brides Wear Orange Blossoms Romantic Story

Did you ever hear the romantic story of why brides wear orange blossoms? Like many fashions in dress, this custom comes to us from France, where it came in turn from Spain. A Spanish legend tells of a king who had a highly prized orange tree. The orange, it may be explained, was a new fruit then in that country, having been introduced only a short time before by the Moors or Arabs. The French Ambassador at the Spanish court wished a slip of this tree. The gardener's daughter, who was so poor she had no dowry and therefore could not marry her lover, secured the slip for him. He paid her so well, she had the money necessary for her marriage. At her wedding she wore blossoms from the tree that had made her happiness possible.

Style Whimsies

Mousseline ruchings and flowers are among the popular novelties for warmer days.

Fedoras of white Panama and Angora wools are usually accompanied by little scarfs of the wool.

Put your small daughter's initials on the buckle of her Angora coat and she will be right in style.

Mole dyed green to match rough crepe dresses in the same shade is a new trimming note. The fur is used on collars and edging Ascot scarfs.

• • •

Wear your favorite animal done in jewels if you want to follow the newest Paris fashion. Birds are among the favorites. Roosters are most colorful, but there are smaller birds—even sparrows and robins—done in a single color.

The puffed sleeves that come just below the elbow are being used on the latest evening gowns.

Wrap-around fox scarves are sometimes dyed to match hyacinth blue dresses.

Hyacinth blue is the color vogue for evening and star-sapphires are the latest in jewels.

Fluffy ruffles at the shoulder line or cascading down the back of a skirt have come to be hallmarks of this season's more formal gowns.

Pearl buttons, clips and buckles play an important part in the decorative style scheme.

The three-tier silhouette suit consisting of one-piece dress, three-quarters coat and shoulder cape is the thing for Spring.

Cheese is a good food economy and will take the place of meat at a meal. It may be combined in a casserole dish, or in a sandwich filling, or a sauce for toast or a vegetable. It is easily digested, if cooked properly, and is filling.

Socks and stockings will dry far more quickly if the hand is run through them all the way to the toe, to separate them thoroughly after washing.

All-White Rooms Now The Rage

All-white rooms are very popular just now, in spite of the ravages of London soot, and Mrs. Somerset Maugham, wife of the dramatist, has a charming all-white drawing-room at her home in Chelsea.

Mrs. Maugham has very cleverly thought out how to employ white without making the general effect monotonous. Although her curtains are of white satin, the upholstery of the painted white wood furniture is made of different materials. Every texture creates a different tone, and as all kinds are used, the result is most effective.

High Heels Detrimental For Women

By GLADYS GLAD

I remarked recently that the woman who wants always to put her best foot forward must first be sure that that foot is encased in a well-fitting shoe. I wish to add, however, that she must also be sure that her well-fitting shoe has a proper heel. For ridiculously high heels can really prove most detrimental to beauty.

For some reason or other, if you tell a woman to wear heels of a sensible height, she immediately begins to think that you're somewhat of a heel yourself. The idea that high heels are dangerous, she thinks just a rumor started by some old, puritanical fogy. But whether she believes it or not, high heels do have their bad points, particularly in two ways. First, they may have an extremely detrimental effect on the posture of the body. And second, they may be the direct cause of poor foot health.

UNNATURAL POSE

In relation to posture, high heels tend to throw the body out of alignment. When such heels are worn, a woman must use muscular effort to keep herself erect. She throws her knees forward, curves her spine excessively, and throws the abdominal organs out of position, in order to preserve her equilibrium. And a good many bodily ills may result from this unnatural carriage of the body.

The feet and legs, too, may be injured through the continual wearing of extremely high heels. Such heels, by throwing the weight constantly forward upon the anterior portion of the foot, are likely to cause depression of the anterior arch. They may also cause painful callouses, corns and the like. Moreover, if a woman persistently wears high heels, the muscles of the back of her legs will shorten. This tends to render the wearing of low-heeled shoes impossible thereafter, because of attendant strain upon the heel cords, and pain in the legs and feet.

Of course, I don't intend to say that women never should wear high heels. That would be prudish—and women wouldn't follow my advice anyway. But I am going to say that only heels of a sensible height should be worn when a woman is to be on her feet for any length of time, or is to do any sizeable amount of walking. For dress wear, and during the few festive hours of evening, high heels are perfectly all right. But for business, street and sports wear, heels of moderate height only should be worn.

Wash cut glass in lukewarm water which has been softened with ammonia, soap, or washing soda.

Fluffy Ruffles

By MME. LISBETH

RUFFLES upon ruffles—maybe that's not the start of the Biblical quotation, but it's the formula upon which this little frock is built.

Countless fluffy ruffles form the sleeves below the elbows; ditto at the hem of the long skirt, and a dainty little ruffle finishes the high neck. It's all very tricky, and is made of white drop-thread organdy with a heavier blue thread drawn through it.

The tiny jacket has short sleeves and is of pale blue silk. What a costume for the kind of blonde that men prefer!
